

SAVED.

A full moon gleamed fitfully through dark rifts of clouds, lighting up a long stretch of beach, upon which the foam-capped billows broke with that deep, moaning sound which presages a coming storm.

"Well, come along, and if blood be spilled, let it be done by your hand, and rest upon your own head. Blood, and almost my own blood, too, for George Hazelton's father was my cousin."

The voice died away in the distance, the rapidly retreating figures disappearing, and Lucy Mott stood white and trembling, with clasped hands, and a heart the wild beating of which seemed to suffocate her.

What should she do indeed? For to save the man she loved, even could this be done, would be to convict her father.

Her first impulse now was to rush wildly out of doors, and running in the direction her father had disappeared, to shriek his name frantically in a half-formed design of pleading with him, of saving him from crime, and George Hazelton from violence if not death.

But the two men, walking rapidly, were already beyond reach of her voice, scarcely to be heard amid the uproar of the now rising storm.

Then Lucy turned, and scarcely knowing what she did, ran swiftly across the sands, through the tangled gorse-bushes, and over the low, marshy tract, thick with weeds and rushes, which lay between her father's house and the road that ran half a mile from the beach.

It was here that George Hazelton must pass on his return from the distant town of M., whether she knew that he had yesterday gone. She had heard a neighbor say something about his leaving his own, and that it would be paid on the morrow.

the window of her own humble home. And yet—as they told her when she grew better—her own great grandmother, who was also the great grandmother of George and Alice, had once been mistress of that house.

Wherefore, said most people, it was not so strange or inappropriate, after all, that Lucy herself should in time become its mistress. They would not allow her to go back to the cottage on the beach, but won by her loveliness of person and disposition, insisted upon keeping her with them at Rocklands; and, in less than a year after, she, as Mr. George Hazelton, claimed it as her legitimate home.

It was here that George Hazelton must pass on his return from the distant town of M., whether she knew that he had yesterday gone. She had heard a neighbor say something about his leaving his own, and that it would be paid on the morrow.

There are many women in New York who are attracted to a shop on the strength of the show windows only. It is the knowledge of this fact that has led one prominent city merchant to hire as a commanding salary an American dressmaker, to show window his wares.

The name of Mr. D. H. Hastings, Governor of the State of Pennsylvania, appears in the list of recent arrivals at the Windsor, Mr. Hastings, with his wife, is enjoying a brief holiday in Canada, and speaks in glowing terms of "its magnificent scenery."

It took not a moment to decide upon what course he should pursue, and lifting the form of the still insensible girl, he placed her in front of him or the saddle, and turning sharply off from the road, struck across the low, marshy tract which extended some distance further between the road and his house.

And now, in place of that sweet half tender voice, the accents which still haunted her, Lucy heard nothing to Martin Heriot's rough, energetic tones, as he spoke rapidly, eagerly.

"I tell you, Mott, the thing must be done at once or not at all. We have scarcely half an hour left."
