THE YELLOW BLESSING.

An able Japanese writer in a native nagazine, the Gicho Sakurai, takes ssue with the Yellow Peril predictions which have been exciting some European nations, especially since the war began. He contends that what is styled the Yellow Peril will prove a ssing for the world. His argument is to the effect that-first, the present E. J. Riggs, of Kensington, N. H., who not morally and physically inferior to vice contains some words that have inferior to the west in matters of lofty tended or hoped to inspire into those more widely than they have ever been spread before; fourth, that the Japanese soldier is really fighting for constitutional government and or constitution and York Theatre,

Orient; and, tenth, that the Russian people will themselves be benefited by a Japanese victory.

The writer might have added that in so far as the high examples of self-sacrificing patriotism, unflinching courage and unexcelled self-restraint of the Japanese soldiers have force, the blessing is already felt. If the Japanese have any of the demoniac qualities attributed to them by those who would make of their progress a bogey to frighten civilization, they have concelled them with wonderful ability. Judging from the record they have made in the past fifty years the only peril the west will have to fear from the Japs is the peril of keen competition in everything that makes a nation honorable and prosperous.
