'This is the largest crowd we ever had,' said Mr. Marr when called upon by a Times reporter last night A visit to the show room is a rare treat. Not only the largest crowd, but THE TIMES man felt bound to confess that he never saw so many beautiful hats and bonnets in his life before, (and he has seen a few too.) No trouble has been spared by this firm to place before the ladies of Moncton the very latest styles direct from Paris, London, New York and Toronto.

The scene looked just like a beautiful garden in full bloom. Flowers are shown in great profusion and so natural do they appear that one could almost smell the perfume. The most popular being roves in ever color geranium, lilac, lily-of-the valley, foliage, pelargoniums, violets are in strong demand and will be exceedingly stylish this season.

Straw trimmings and chiffons will be extremely popular. For early spring trade the ever popular turban will again be paramount. In dress hats the styles show n decided change (u.m. last year, the hats

JACKALS KILL A LION.

They Pull Down and Eat a Desert King That is Too Old to Fight Them Off.

When a lion takes a walk in Africa or Asia it is followed commonly at a respectful distance by half a dozen jackals, which not being strong enough to pull down game for themselves and yet eager to taste blood, go after the great still hunter of the desert in the hope of getting the drippings from its claws. The lion does not object to them, as one swing of its unsheathed claws teaches the venturesome jackal a lesson that may be survived but never forgotten

A large lion which had grown old and weak, losing teeth and litheness of limbs, as well as sharpness of vision, in the shrubbery which grows up in the southern parts and to the south of the Desert of Sahara, and to the south of the betrayed its failing strength one day last spring, and instantly the near-by jackals, which had been respectful, came forward on the run and gave Wilson James, an American hunter, a fine lion-baiting scene.
The lion had sneaked toward a herd of antelopes which James was sneaking. It hap-pened that the lion got within range before the man did, and leaped out a medium sized buck, bearing it to the ground. The most astonishing thing that the man had ever seen then happened. The buck, a sturdy three-year-old, in the prime of lite and vigor, rolled over, and in spite of the jaws and claws which the lion closed on it got out of reach, leaped to its closed on it got out of reach, leaped to its feet and made off as only a scared, lean-limbed antelope can. The librorose to its feet, lifted its head, and watched the fleeting animal join its comrades on a knoll half a mile away. Then down went the lion's head, and the big brute started to walk on across the open in which the antelope had been. The jackals, which had been creeping on their bellies before the leap was made, and had sat up to watch the result, started up the moment they saw the lion fail, and sprang after it with eager bounds, and howling as if on the trail of a wounded deer. Nine of the jackals appeared in the open, but others came from all directions, and all were howling. They began to circle about the lion, which had stopped to watch them with mane bristing and tail jerk: Gradually the pack grew bolder. Some of the larger ones jumped toward the lion, landing nearer each time, but leaping back quickly, One more venturesome than the rest nipped the lion's heel, and the big brute turned clumsily, too late to grip the daring dog. In its prime, the lion never allows jackals to come within ten feet of the meat it is eating, and kills those that do after the fashion of lions, but thus one could not protect its own akin now.

First on one side, then on the other, came the jackals leaped to the back of the lion and was off and away before the brute could turn. James had heard lions roar at night and in the daytime because of love hunger, or wounds, but never such roars as those this lion gave. Neither did he ever hear more joyiul howls or yelps from any of the dog kind than the howls of, the jackals ready weakening.

The commotion had roused life for miles aroun!. Jackals hurrying to the attack from their daytime lairs came for a mouthful. The screaming birds and carrion eaters hovered above, while all the clovenhoofed animals grew uneasy and ceased feeding to look in the direction whence the sounds came.

The end came suddenly. A jackal which had made itself conspicuous by its feet and made off as only a scared, leanlimbed antelope can. The lim rose to its feeding to look in the direction whence the sounds came.

The end came suddenly. A jackal which had made itself conspicuous by its daring, and supposed by James to have been the one that first leaped to the lion's back, jumped as to seize the lion by the nose, but the lion was too quick this time and sank his teeth into the jackal's neck. Then the pack leaped forward all at once, and a monnd of jackals heaved over the lion. When the mound dissolved a few bones were left to whiten in the dry smallpht. sunlight.

NAPOLRON'S HORSE MARBNGO. He was Doubtless the Mos Famous War

The most celebrated war horse of the present century is unquestionably Napoleon's Marengo. In view of the many hundred biographies of the great captain, it is certainly surprising that so little should be known with any degree of certainty concerning this world-famous charger. To an American visitor to the dethroned Bonaparte at Chiselhust, in June, 1872, Louis Napoleon, in a conversation about his own horses and the war steeds of the most illastrious of modern soldiers, said:

'The Emperor's favorite charger was Marengo, an Arab of good size and style, and almost white. He rode him in his last battle of Mount St. Jean, where Marengo received his seventh wound. I once mounted him when a youth, and but a short time before the steed died at the age of 36. Another faverite war horse was named Maria, and was used by the Emperor in many of his hundred battles. Her skeleton is now to be seen in the ancient castle of Ivenach, on the Rhine, the property of the Von Plessen family. Of the other sixty or seventy horses owned by Napoleon and used in battle, perhaps the most famous were Ali, Austerlitz, Styrie, and Jaffa, He had nineteen killed under him.'

The American visitor might have added, but he did not, that Marshal Blucher had twenty shot in battle, while Gens. Custer and Forrest are believed to have each lost almost as many in the brief period of four years. Maria, or Marie, is thus described by Victor Hugo in the words of a French battle of Mount St. Jean, where Marengo engo and conveyed them to his estate in England. The tombstone of the former is to be seen at Glassenbury, in Kent, with this inscription, Under this stone lies Jaffe the celebrated charger of Napoleon.' The last trampat call sounded for Marengo in September, 1829, just as be had completed 36 pears. After his death his bones received an honorable place in the military institute as already mentioned.

Another souvenir of the famous steed is one of his hoofs made into a snuffbox, which makes its daily round after dinner at the Queen's Guard, in St. James's Palace. London. On the silver lid is the legend: 'Hoof of Marengo, barb chargar of Napoleon, ridden by him at Marengo, Austerliz, Jens, Wagram, in the Russian campaign, and at Waterloo,' and round the silver shoe the legend continues: 'Marengo was wounded in the rear hip at Waterloo, when his great master was on him in the hollow road in advance of the French position. He had been frequently wounded before in other battles.' Constant the Emperor's valet, says: 'He had a most ungraceful seat,' and Hugo's old soldier, in answer to the question how the great Corsican rode, replies: 'Badly. He did not know how to fall off, and so he never fell off.'

There has been a great deal of disagreement from time to time about the thera pautic value of Sarasparilia. In the main, an'horities deny any particular medical value to the plant, "ft's just an old wive's remedy," they say. And in the main they are right. There are about a dozen varieties of sarasparilla, scattered through various countries, and of this dozen only one has any real curative power. So a man whose experience might be confined to the other eleven varieties might honestly say there was little value in them. The one valuable saraspariila is found in Honduras, C. A. Monardes, a physician of duras, C. A. Monardes, a payassas of Saville, records the introduction of sarasparilla into Spain a result of the Spanish discoveries of the New World, between 1536 and 1545. But the root did not accomplish much. But he adds, "a better sort soon after came from Honduras." It is this "better sort" that fs used exclusively in Ayer's Sarasparilla. And it is the use of this "better sort" that has give use of this "better sort" that has given Ayer's Sararparilla prominence over all varieties by reason of its wonderful cares of blood diseases. PORT WITH BROMBIES.

lunting the Wild Horses That Roam Over

The brombie, the wild horse of uncertain rigin, which roams the Australian plains, is bunted by the Australians for sport and profit. The brombie herds, of about a loz m animals each, are exceedingly destructive, and next to rabbits, are the most ated animals iu Australia,

It is supposed that these mustangs are progeny of the horses which from time to time have escaped from the ranches. The wild life has agreed with them and they have grown into a type nicely adapted to their surroundings. The stallion, which can trace its pedigree back through uncounted generations of the brombies, is a handsome beast, with a trim body, quivering muscles, and a gait exceedingly graceful, almost flying, the hunters of brombies say. Arthur C. Stephens was . once in a rombie hunt on the plantation of McLean in the northern part of Queensland, on the shores of the gult of Carpentaria. A hard of brombies, six mares, three yearling colts and a cream colored stallion were damag-

gave me the cross I noticed his beast. It had its ears very far apart, a deep saddle, a fine head marked with a black star, a very long neck, prominent knees, projecting flanks, oblique shoulders and a strong crupper. She was a little above fifteen hands high. The Hon. Francis Lawley of London, possesses the picture of a white Arab stallion the history of which is well-known, with the inscription in French, Ali, battle charger of Napoleon. Hs was captured from the Mamclukes and presented to the grast captain. On his downfall a Frerch gentlemen purchased Jafin Marengo and conveyed them to his estate in England. The tombstone of the former is to be seen at Glassenbury, in Kent, with ped the noise the riders had been making. Very quickly the party turned around a point of the hill, and there was the cream point of the hill, and there was the cream colored stallion, fifty yards away, head up and tail arched, with its family near by. The stallion started and away it went, the horsemen widening out in a crescent. One lassoer managed, at the expense of his horse's wind, to turn the stallion back to another lassoer, who, with his rope, stopped it. Jackie, after the stallion had got to its feet again with a blanket on his head, leaped to its back and jerked the blanket off. Then the animal danced a walkingbeam jig, trying in vain to shake the man off. At last it started away at full speed. The rest of the party captured the other animals, and when they got to camp were followed by Jackie on the stallion, which had become docile.
