A Girl's Analysis of a flirt.

Sitting on the veranda of one of the larre tels at an Autumn resort, I idly watched he different groups before me, and wonderd if those young people, so gay and bright eyond enjoyment and flirtation. As I watched them, one pretty girl attended by young man. strolled toward me.

'Let us find a comfortable corner and talk ensibly,' said the girl. 'I am tired of so much chatter and nonsense.'

I must here confess that I am an English bachelor, very shy, and very critical of American girls. 'Good Heavens!' I thought, as they stopped before me, 'I hope they will not try to talk sensibly too near me. I shall go if they do; I can't stand their senseless chatt

The girl looked at me with a rather haughty, questioning air, as if she wanted to know by what right I had taken a seat in one of the coriest, most recluded, corners 'Go bring some chairs, Niel,' she comanded. Her willing slave hastened to do

er bidding, while she turning her back pon me, apparently ceased to notice my gracefully seating herself in the low wicker face upturned to his, her large brown eyes full ef contempt at the mere thought of a 'Oh,' thought I, 'engaged, are they

what is a flirt?' 'A flirt?'—pausing a moment, apparently in deep thought—I don't know. Go and get your chair, and we will think it out.' The lover was soon seated near her.

'Now, Jack, your theory on flirtation and fiirts in general,' he said. 'Jack! odd idea to call a girl Jack!' thought I, but one must cease to wonder in America. I would like to hear her ideas if she has any, but must, I suppose, remind them that they have a listener.' Closing my book with one force and coughing loudly. I threw myself back in my chair, and pulling my hat over my eyes made somewhat noisy preparations for listening I saw the little golden head turn quickly then, with a lerk of her chair, which more answered, turning his eyes from the merry group which they had left; but you were not saying anything just then, you know. Well, but I am going to tell you what a flirt is.

'Oh yes; what is a flirt?' 'I have never thought of it until now, he said musingly. You have called me a flirt, Niel; never do it again. But you did not know what you were saying, so I for-

'Thanks,' he answered dryly. 'No, I did not know; tell me.'

'Of course flirts are attractive,' she be 'Why?' interposed Niel, with rather nischievous expression in his eyes.

'I suppose because they are usually eloquent, although their thoughts are almost always shallow. The little woman seemed to be thinking aloud, while Niel valiantly kept his eyes away from the group which had proved so attractive to him before. the continued: 'They are men or wom sex, not because they value it for itself, but ts charm, and the chase begins elsewhere. 'Ye shades of Solomon! where will the wisdom of these fragile, doll-like American girls end?' I meditated, 'She can't be more than nineteen, at most, she thinks her thoughts aloud, talks like a book, and still keeps this poor boy at her feet.' This proves them inconsistent and insin-zere,' she continued. 'In order to gain the whom they are fliting. Any man or wom an who is attractive in appearance can flirt, so long as he is eloquent, self-confident, selfish and heartless.' 'Well, Jack, you are rather severe, aren't you, on poor Kitty Starr and myself? 'Kitty Starr and yourself?' she inquired, with a charming sir of innocent ameze conscience, you know. Then you have been flirting with Kitty. Confess! I saw she was flirting with you, but you were only being fooled, that was all, dear,' she hastily on his face. 'She is a real flirt. Do not strong digestive organs. allow yourself to be so easily taken in nent. Jack was flushed, angry, and almost in tears, while Niel, sullen and somewhat contemptuous in his manner, obstina ely refused to give up the li tle acrap of paper on which he had written Jack's advice. I hastened away reluctantly, almost longing to point out to them their error.

In the evening I went to the dance, solely; be it known, to see Jack and Niel; but perhaps her first quarrel with her lover? I wished that she could have taken my place and watched Niel, for he began his evening gaily, spending much of his time with a tall, stylish young lady, whom, upon inquiry, I found to be Miss tarr. He certainly seemed to have already profited by Jack's will never condescend to flirt,' she said of flirtation with wonderful rapidity; but as the evening wore on he took his station chair which he had brought, her childlike by the door, an anxious expression on his harry which her large brown even handsome face, while he eagerly watched the arrivals.

Midnight came, but no gelden-haired, brown-eyed little Micerva came to make Niel happy, and before long he left the rooms. Ah, Jack, if you only knew your power and where you fail!

On the following morning I left the hotel, but had the satisfaction of seeing Niel join Jack and her mother at their breakfastreakfast; their happy faces told that the not even glance at Kitty Starr as she slowly sauntered past them on her way to her table -[By L. Danton.

The Dom stic Problem.

'We are placing a good many girls, but I'm afraid we are not solving the domestic soblem,' said the anxious-faced chairman of the committee on employment connected with a large philanthropic institution. The underlying idea of her remark was that and that she there is a solution for what we call 'the doered as we may discover the answer to a for the ills of housewives. Yesterday it was cooperative housekeeping. To day it is the housing of servants outside the home, To-morrow it may be the return of the mistress to the kitchen, and her consequent mancipation from the inefficiencies appointments of paid service.

The truth is that in none of these plans resides any general or permanent relief from There is no program of domestic reform which can make the questions of breakfast, The only 'program' that will help the individual woman, and, through her, society as a whole, is that she shall be a better woman. Whether she is rich or poor, whether she keeps twenty servants, or one general housework girl, or no servant at all, whether she is mistress or maid, the simple fact is not for her own selfish pleasure, nor even for club, or church, or society, but for making the home in which she lives a comfortable, peaceful and inspiring place.

To this end she must be a good won considerate, firm, prompt, kind, patient, capable, just, honorable, unselfish, every one maids and mi-tresses alike, are better women the domestic problem will be solved .- [Youth's Companion,
