

We seek the bloom of the aglantine,
Of the pointed thistle and brier;
And follow the steps of the wandering vine,
Whether it trail on the earth, aspine,
Or round the aspiring tree-top twine,
And reach for a state still higher.

While each on the good of her sister's bent,
Is busy and cares for all;
We hope for an evening with heart's content,
That summer is gone, its hours misspent,
And the harvest is past recall. F. H. Gould.

Blunders.—The Russian Minister, Poletica, travelling in Kentucky, stopped to dine at a tavern. The landlord understanding his guest was "a Minister," civilly asked him if he would say grace. Poletica, not understanding him, took it for granted he offered to send him some ham, next which he was standing, and replied, "none of dat, I thank you." False despatch is one of the most dangerous things to business that can be. It is like that which the physicians call pre-digestion, or hasty digestion which is sure to fill the body full of crudities and secret seeds of diseases. I knew a wise man that had it for a bye word, "stay a little then we make an end the sooner." On the other side true despatch is a rich thing; for time is the measure of business as money is of ware; and business is bought at a dear hand, where there is small despatch.—Bacon.
