Canadian and American markets in fresh or frozen state. Canning takes care of a great deal of certain species, particularly tuna, lobsters and sardines, while important by-products such as vitamin oils and fertilizers are achieving more prominence.

Under the British North America Act, the Federal Government exercises complete legislative authority over Canada's fisheries with laws under the Act providing for the protection and conservation of the fisheries in all provinces. Federal and provincial governments divide administrative authority over the fisheries. One of the most important aspects of federal legislation provides close regulation over the catch of many species of fish and strict supervision is applied to these conservation measures.

As a federal police force, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police provides assistance to officials of the Department of Fisheries in enforcing the provisions of the Fisheries Act. It is therefore, not uncommon to see members of the Force on patrol in conversation with fishermen, such as is depicted on the cover of this magazine.

No magazine is any better than its contributors make it and in a publication such as the RCMP Quarterly this is particularly true. Much of the material appearing in The Quarterly is channelled through Divisional Associate Editors, an unsung group of assistants who, apart from the listing on the contents page of this magazine, largely work anonymously. Theirs is a part-time job, as far as this publication is concerned and apart from those directly concerned with the publication of the magazine, probably few appreciate the value of their assistance.

This small expression of appreciation for the services of Associate Editors is particularly appropriate at this time since The Quarterly has just lost the services of two who have served in that capacity for a combined total of over 20 years—Sgt. G. M. Dobie of "F" Division and Sgt. E. Scott of "E". The Quarterly will miss their experienced help, but may the two of them enjoy the benefits of retirement for many years to come.
