Bemembranees of the Dead

These things may pass away, But past things are not dead; In the heart's treasury Deep, hidden deep, they lie Unwithered.

And there the soul retires From the dust things that are, To minele off and ione With the time-hallowed throng Of those that were,

Then into life start out The scenes long vanished; Then we beheld again The forms that long have lain Among the dead.

We feel their grasp of love, We meet their beaming eye. We hear their voice-ah, no! Twas our own murmuring low, Unconsciously.
