MACK IS RIGHT IN BREAKING UP HIS BALL CLUB, SAYS FULLERTON

(By Hugh S. Fullerton)

and rebuild the team.

To me it seems that Mack is wiser than we have thought. He has seen some of his players go back steadily; has seen others grow careless of discipline, and of playing, because of continued prosperity.

The question now is can Connie Mack create from the remnants of his old team a new pennant competitor. He can, if anyone can. Mack is, in my judgment, the greatest judge of ballplayers we have ever known. He is a remarkable student of players. He watched the colleges. It is said that to-day there are a dozen players in college who practically belong to Mack.

In many cases Mack does these things out of pure friendship for the players or for the minor league managers.

How many future Collins and Bakers and Planks he has on demand, he alone knows. But it is safe to say he knows where he can get material for a strong team. It is currently reported that half a dozen more of the Athletics, tempted by offers from the Feds, tried to "hold up" Mack for larger salaries.

Had they won the world's championship he probably would have been compelled to yield, or to compromise, but losing put them in bad tactical positions. Mack now has a strong alibi to present in case he is criticized for letting go his stars.

First: Philadelphia is a cheap ball town. Even when the team is drawing well, the crowds do not pay as much as smaller crowds do in other cities. They have been trained that way.

Second: The Athletics never have been a magnetic team. Their personality has not been known. Few of them had personal following.

Thirdly: Philadelphia grew weary of watching them; lost interest because they won so steadily. Last year with a world's championship team winning another American League pennant, the team did not draw at home.

Fourthly: The players are growing old in point of service and are prospecting in the face of a losing year. As a businessman, half owner of the team, Mack could not see the way to pay more; as a baseball manager he realized that the team is past its best, and going back in some departments.

There will, of course, be a loud and long howl from the public over the passing from the Athletics of Bender, Plank, Coombs, Oldring, and perhaps Barry, Baker and even Collins.

But in any other business any businessman would see that the best thing to do is to clean house entirely

"SHAG" DRIVING M'GILL FOR GAME WITH U. OF T.

MONTREAL, Nov. 18.—McGill yesterday began to make serious preparations for its game for the Intercollegiate championship with University of Toronto next Saturday.

Coach Shaughnessy had the bunch out for a light workout, the greater part of the time being spent in tackling the dummy and in running on Saturday, so the men are ready for a great week's work in preparation for the final effort.

The footing on the campus was heavy and holding from recent snow and rain, which made it dangerous to work on. The interference play used by McGill against Queen's was thought of by the coach.

Shaughnessy has developed a play which he believes will stop an opposing side's line plunges. This play worked well Saturday, and it is thought will prove beneficial against the heavier line of the University of Toronto team on Saturday.

It is hardly likely that there will be any changes made in the team for Saturday against University of Toronto to from that against Queen's last week.

CANADIAN LEAGUE IS GOING BACK TO CLASS C

President Fitzgerald of the Canadian League upon his return from the Omaha convention denied that the league had made an application to close its parks next season. The President looks forward to at least a fair year. The only probable change in the league will have to do with the Erie club.

Next year the Canadian League will be a Class C league, with a reduced salary and player limit. The new rule of 30 per cent. reductions in salaries paid to the players in the Canadian League will be even greater because last season the salaries ran riot in the league.

ANOTHER $30,000 FIGHT FOR JACK JOHNSON

LONDON, Nov. 17.—Articles were signed yesterday for a boxing contest of from 20 to 45 rounds between Jack Johnson, the heavyweight champion and Jesse Willard, an American "white" hope. The fight will take place during the last two weeks of March at some place to be chosen February 15. It is said that the battleground probably will be Mexico.

Each of the boxers deposited $10,000 to guarantee his appearance at the ring-side. Johnson is to receive $30,000 for fighting.

MISS BY THE CABLES

Graphic Incidents of the War, Told in Soldiers' Letters and by Wounded Men From the Front.

(Letter from — P. Mullaney, Irish Guards, now in King's College Hospital, London).

We dug some trenches. Without warning the enemy's shells came flying around us. We lay close to the ground listening to the merry whistle of them dropping in front and in rear. It made you sweat waiting for the shock of getting hit.

A good job some of the shells were defective and went into the ground without bursting, or should be here to tell the truth, it was proper agony. We could not see the guns or their men, so we were helpless; it seemed like dying in a hole. I wouldn't have minded it if we had seen someone to have a pot at.

The sky turned pure black and we knew we were going to have a heavy shower. But we had a double event—a shower of bullets also. I could see we were attacked in the rear, and all was confusion for a few minutes, but our men soon woke up, and we got the order to fix bayonets.

Down came the rain and lightning and thunder crashing. I stood for a moment to survey the whole scene. It was like something you read about, even a shower of bullets also. I could see we were attacked in the rear, and all was confusion for a few minutes, but our men soon woke up, and we got the order to fix bayonets.

Back from those guns," roared some officer to the Germans, "or I'll have every one of you slaughtered." They didn't want telling twice.

We proceeded to line up the prisoners and collect the spoils, which amounted to about 150 prisoners, 6 Maxim guns and 38,000 rounds of ammunition, which we had the pleasure of using on them later; not counting the dead and wounded.

That finished our day. We had no dinner till the following morning.

A colonel of the Royal Field Artillery has sent the following letter to his wife:

"The twelfth day of our battle; still plugging away from our same, well-selected position. It has been a dog's life, but of course, they are dug deeply into the ground, and have to keep on the sharp look-out, as well as concealed from the enemy, from daylight to sunset, when we retire for the night into our dug-outs and caves. All the hillsides in this part are riddled with caves carved out of the soft sandstone, and a large proportion of the native population always took to them. They come in very useful for us for shelters both for man and horse.

"Of course, the country is practically empty of natives. The people are still in their farmhouses; they are absolutely nothing to eat, so we feed them out of our rations. We have eaten all their stock of winter keep, vegetables, oats, both threshed and unthreshed; but of course, they are given a payment requisition, and they get paid daily in cash by the Division cashier, so they will not be quite destitute.

"There are three small children, and they all sit up every night until our dinner time, when we stuff them with bread and jam and sago or rice pudding, and send them off to bed. The people are so starving, and take their losses awfully well.

"We are getting very cunning at removing bushes and planting them where we want them as screens and unthreshed; but of course, they are given a payment requisition, and they get paid daily in cash by the Division cashier, so they will not be quite destitute.

Concert Under Fire.
(Letter from Sergt. George Coulter, attached to Divisional Staff of First Division.)
I am a bit down in the mouth over a thing that happened last night. We had a bit of a sing-song and smoker to mark the arrival in camp of a couple of boxes of cigarettes. My best chum, the one I have told about so often, was called on for a song, and just as he took his lag out of his mouth to oblige, a shell dropped into us, and he was badly wounded on the side and in the head. "I'm done for, George," was all he had time to say, and off he went. He was a fine chum. No man ever had better, and we were all cut up about it.

A "White" German.
There is at least one "white" German in the German ranks, and for his sake I am not going to say anything about the others. I was lying with a helpless arm when I saw him coming, and as I had heard so many stories of their cruelty to the wounded I raised myself a little and got ready with my revolver. At the same minute he levelled his rifle and was taking careful aim. Then he noticed my wounded arm. He lowered his rifle and passed on without a word. Beef and Bullets
Sapper Evan Davies, of B Signal Company Royal Engineers, who prior to the war was employed at the general post office Cardiff, writing to his brother, describes the battle of Le Cateau. He says:
"The British soldiers have won much praise for the way in which they checked the German advance. The British soldier does not easily get excited. I have seen them eating their bully beef and smoking their pipes with bullets whizzing around them. After a few weeks of this sort of thing a soldier does not put much value on human life. I sincerely hope that another month will see us on the German frontier."
