OUR FASHION LETTER

ARIS STAGE GOWNS REALY GIVE THE KEYNOTES OF FASHION.

scription of Some of These Gowns--Evening Gowns Were Never More Simple." laffets Silk in Constant Demand-Cloth or Veiling Trimmed With It.

The costumes worn on the stage in Paris invariably give the keynote to the fashions of each season, and dressmakers, as well as society women, always make a point of attending all the ashionable plays, for in this way they, conest see the novelties, the model sowns that are so jealously guarded from the eye of the rival dressmaking establishment. Small wonder is it that the stage should be the best place to display the fashions. The actresses are women of fine presence, who understand to perfection the art of wearing their clothes—as they do posing for a photographer—and it may be assumed there is not the smallest detail of their gown that is not exhibited to the best advantage.

A play lately produced in Paris-"En Fete" is the name—is conceded to be one of the best gowned plays of the present time and the costumes are being copied in every variety of texture and coloring.

The gown worn by Mme. Valdey in this play of "En Fete" and is a most Boue Soeurs, and is of the light drab charming example of coloring and style. The model was designed by cloth so extremely fashionable for the moment. The princess effect is to be noticed, which the dressmakers call the bodice effect, meaning that the skirt instead of being finished at the waist line is cut high enough to form a bodice, the waist being worn inside. Lines of tucks, or cords, hide the darts that are necessary to insure the re-quisite perfect fit over the hips, and the lines are arranged to be longer in front than at the back, to preserve the inevitable long pointed waist line. A wide, attached flounce, headed with soft folds of white liberty silk or panne velvet, caught up at regular intervals by rosettes or buckles and giving the effect of scallops, finishes the skirt. The flounce is finished with rows of stitching and has applique designs of yellow lace. A bolero tacket of taffeta silk or cloth, with rows of narrow tucks, is trimmed with bands of black at the elbow and also at the shoulder and are strapped with bands of taffets. This gown can be made with taffeta of the same shade as the veiling, and that is indeed the general rule; but there is a bright blue that looks especfally well with trimmings of black, and the new shade of red can also stand the sharp contrast of the black. although the fancy at present seems to be for the all one tone gowns. Veiling gowns, especially those intended for hard wear, should -never be trimmed with white taffeta, for it is too conspicuous to start with, and, besides, would soil quite too easily. Pinked ruffles of taffeta silk are also mart for trimming veiling gowns, and the same rule applies to them as to the shirred bands and flat folds. They must either match in color or be of fessed, more expensive than at the present time. The simplicity lies in the plain flat effects, the expense in the materials that are employed in the construction of these same gowns. Cloth of gold and cloth of silver, brocades, heavy satin and panne velvet. with wondrous embroidery, are considred none too superb to make up the dinner and ball gowns, and the trimmings of real lace and rich jewelled assementerie cannot fail to cost a lot of money. In a ball gown worn by Mile. Yahne, and designed by Doucet. The design is an extremely simple one. and the lines are long and unbroken, but the material is superb. Cloth of gold forms the skirt, the train of which is composed of a myriad of ruffles of seline de soie. The waist is of pleated mousseline de sole over cloth of gold, trimmed around the shoulders with a band of gold passementerie that is put on to join a strap over the shoulder and finish in a point directly in front. Below the top of the arm are bands of gold ribbon finished with heavy gold tassels. A jewelled belt, very narrow and fastened in front with a handsome buckle, finishes the skirt. which is worn outside the waist. As can be seen in the illustration, velvet factory means by which you may shoulders with folds of white to and lace and is finished round the match the skirt and gathered ruffle. The yoke, collar and front are of stitched taffeta, the stitching put on in round lines. Novel elbow sleeves, with full undersleeves of white chiffon. complete this essentially smart cos-simple in design nor, it must be con-

It is interesting to notice that in spite of the assertions constantly made for lining, for trimming, is combined with other materials, and whole costumes are made of it; while a new fad is to use it in dinner and ball gowns. In stitched flounces and folds, in fuchings and bands and in every known color is this silk to be had, both in the soft and the stiff qualities. The taffeta silk petticoats are acknowledged to wear badly, but of all petticeats they are the best, and are trimmed with the same, or with lace or chiffon.

The gowns made of some material combined with taffeta are considered Immensely smart this season. Last year it was the taffeta silk gowns with the cloths that were so popular. This season the style is reversed, and again it is cloth or veiling that has the taffeta trimmings. A charming costume worn by Mme. Valdef, is a capital model. The skirt is one of this season's most becoming shapes, close fitting over the hips, but with picaty of fulness in the back breadths and a tremendous flare to the skirt. A shaped flounce is gathered and trimmed with three folds of black taffeta; above the flounce is a broad shirred band of taffeta, then five rows of plain taffeta bands. The waist is in blouse shape, trimmed around the lower part with taffeta bands, and then a row of shirring to match the trimming on the skirt. The waist is open in front to show a lace vest, and there are smaller revers of white satin, with narrow bands of velvet and gold buttons and a round lace collar. The sleeves have puff, the skirt is quite long and has the usual flare around the foot. It is almost circular in shape with no vis ible seams, as the material of which It is made is of double width, woven especialy for this style of skirt.

Constant complaint is made of the mount of money required to dress according to the latest fashion, and it certainly does require more money than was formerly necessary in order to be correctly turned out. Not only do the gowns themselves cost more now, but all the accessories of dress are vastly more expensive than they vere, and under the head of accessories are included corsets, petticoats and lingerie for the play, a most important part in the dress of to-day. The tight fitting, flaring skirts, no matter how carefully they are constructed, will not hang well if worn over a badly cut, badly fitted petticoat. The street gown requires a different shaped petticoat from the house gown and hall gown, the petticoats must match or be a contrast to the gowns with which they are worn, and so on indefinitely.

If this whiting is used carefully, so that none gets into the action, the keys will look beautifully clean. Some people use sawdust and ammonia for this purpose, but the sawdust is apt to scatter too much for the welfare of the piano. But if any small ornaments of ivory have to be cleaned, sawdust wet with ammonia is excellent for stain removing. Spirits of wine mingled with the sawdust is another capital agent when ammonia is not attainable.

Men and women, tired out, run down, despondent, sick, sfeepless, rheumatic, and those afflicted with blood diseases and liver and kiney troubles, have regained health strength and buoyancy of spirits by the use of the great medicine.

Thousands of unsolicited letters of estimony have poured in from those who have been made well and strong. The wealthy and poor, the famous and those in humble circumstances have villingly testified in favor of Paine's Celery Compound. Mr. J. Ralston, of Nixon, Out., writes as follows :-

"It gives me great pleasure to add my testimony to the ever increasing popularity of your preparation known as Paine's Celery Compound. It is now a year past since I had a se-vere attack of nervous prostration, caused by chronic dyspepsia, and for a year I could not sleep at night. This ondition of sleeplessness brought on delirium. I was attended by four of the best doctors of the country and ook a great quanity of medicine, but all failed to do me any good. Having been pursuaded to read your books, thought I would try your Paine's Celery Compound; and after I had used four bottles, the nervousness left me, and I have done more work since than for years past. I now enjoy excellent health and consider myself completely cured. I have highly recommended your Paine's Celery Compound to others, and I know of sev-

In the chancel is a truly old monuneft surmounted by an old iron vizer and some iron gauntlets, dug up on the sites of the famous battles fought in this district. A long inscription on this handsome monument sets forth the public and private virtues and chivalrous deeds of Sir Beviele Grenville, the hero of Stamford Hill, mehr Stratton who was ford Hill, near Stratton, who was killed while fighting the rebels at the battle of Lansdowne, July, 1643. The decorations of the church are de-cidedly "high," as in fact are those of Paughill, Straeton and Marham thurch. Candles burn on each of these altars, a large brass cross stands on the altars and the services are ritualistic in the extreme. The Rev. John Harvey was for some time curate of Kiellampton parish and it was here that he wrote his "meditations among the tombs."

A drive of about two hours through high hedges, past the famous house of "Stawe," down a hill so steep that we had to alight from the carriage and lead the horses, through the romantic Combe Valley mentioned by Charles Kinglley in his "Westward Ho," over a stone bridge bearing the following inscription: "Toward the erection of this bridge, built by subscription in the year of human redemption, 1836, His most gracious Majesty King William the Fourth gave the sum of twenty pounds."

hear God, honor the King," and on over more high gorse covered hedges and hills brings you to Morwenstowe, a tiny village on the coast. The cliffs along this coast are remarkably fine and precipitous, that known as Hennacliff, or the Ravens Craig rising 450 feet from the shore beach and with the the sheer beach and with the ex-ception of Beachy Head is said to be the highest perpendicular cliff in England. The whole of Hennacliff may be seen from a projecting piece of the hill about half way up, and there is a path difficult of access leading down to the beach.

Morwenstowe is known ecclesias-tically as the place of Saint Morwenna, the church which takes its name from that saint, being one of the most interesting of the kind in the county. It faces the sea and may be seen for a great distance. The entrance is at the back of the church yard and the gate stands under a beautiful ivy covered arch. By the side of this glateway is a stile of wide stone steps. A narrow path through the neglected grave-yard leads to the church porch, Norman in character, over which is a sun-dial, bearing the inscription ife is like a shadow."

The interior looks somewhat cold and dreary owing to the snowy walls and absence of stained glass windows. But the tiny glass panes were made when glass was first discovered, and it is interesting to note the difference between these half-inch thick panes with an enormous bub-ble in the middle and the window glass of the present day. The ceilings, once beautifully carved in cak. are now only white-washed plaster and the once handsome screen of curiously carved birds, beasts and human faces has been removed, only small portions of it remaining. altars are covered with beautifully executed sik embroidered altar cloths. The arches, three of which are the remains of St. Morwenna's church built in 875, are supported by huge stone pillars at each which, near the ceiling, are the carved heads of satyrs, hideous animals The benches are of the usual etc. oak, black and decayed, but with dragoos and monograms carved thereon. On one old bench this inscription is carved in old English lettering, "This was made in the year of our Lord God, 1575," Several of the old floor stones have been removed to make room for modern tiling. One or two of these are preserved in the church. One of them is beautifully carved with coat-of-arms and the figure of a Knight in armor with the date 1591. This stone has been replaced by a brass memorial in the chancel. morial in the chancel. The oldest floor stone is dated 1668. The interesting old font is no less than 800 years old, and is very much like one in Sauncell's church. Just at the bottom of the church yard is the Vicarage of renown, as being for 37 years the residence of the Vicar, the late Rev. R. S. Hawker, the author of some beautiful Cornish ballads. Our late gracious Queen recognized Mr. Hawker's services to the literature of his country by granting a pension to his

The house has beautiful old diamond paned windows, its grey walls are partially hidden by clinging ivies, its doors are huge, black and studded with large fron nails, and its tall chimneys are ach built like the differently shaped towers of the seven sister churches, Sauncells, Stratton, Marhamchurch, Paughill, Morwenstowe, Kilkhampton and St. Gennys.

I quite neglected to say that on the opposite side of the road from Stowe, is a well with a shady elm growing over it. This is claimed to be the identical tree under which Sir! Walter Raleigh smoked his first pipe and from this well the old woman drew the bucket of water with which to throw over him and extinguish the supposed fire. As so many other neighborhoods in England claim to possess a tree and well with the same story attached, I only give this for what it is worth.

White visiting Norwenstowe we also went to see the tiny sanctum where Mr. Hawker wrote his "Cornish Ballads." It is built in the side of a cliff overhanging the sea, and is reached by means of a steep narrow path. The cozy lattle summer house is built entirely of wreckage and is
