by the Ladies of the Sacky Rum and Crime. BY HON. A. B. RICHMOND Concluded! Drunkenness is no excuse for crime, but it is many times an aggravation of the offence. The law licenses the bar-room and beer saloon, where men are permitted to sell in-toxicating liquors, and of course this gives other men the right to drink. The effect of rum is as certain in its results as any phenomena based upon the laws of our physical organ-ism. The law knows this full well, for our judges are prolific in their advice to the criminals when sentenced:

"That after their term of imprisonment has expired, in the future to abment has expired, in the future to abstain from the use of intoxicating drink, and avoid those places where it is sold."

Why this advice? The courts sell credited with unbounded affections, and the horse with almost human sagacity; but the cat still suffers under the bad character that Buffon—who can not have been acquainted with Louis Napoleon, 207. The price Why this advice? The courts sell good citizens the right to vend for profit, a certain article, and then advise men not to purchase it, or even go where it is sold. If the sale of rum is right under a license, and the the household. J. G. Wood answers court sells these licenses and then tries they are sold, it is a fraud on the rum seller. It is to be heped that this moral view of the question will attract the attention of our judges, and that they will act as honestly as the law and their official position will permit.
