Recognizing One's Self.

By RUTH CAMERON.

A friend of mine who has slightly sub-normal sight, but much more than the normal sense of humor, delights to tell this story on herself.

As she approached a doorway in a department store one day, another woman approached from the opposite direction. Miss H. (my friend) stepped to the right, the woman did the same. Miss H. then stepped to the left, her vis-a-vis was seized with the same inspiration at the same moment. After repeating this dodging twice, my friend thought it was time to put an end to the misunderstanding, so she, stood perfectly still and said with rather chilly politeness:

"Madame, if you will stay on one side or the other perhaps we can manage to pass each other."

Whereupon the floorwalker bore down upon her and explained that she was standing in front of a mirror. She ought to know what she looks like by this time.

Miss H. is a woman of fifty. In spite of her near-sightedness, which is by no means extreme, it does seem as if she ought to know her own appearance well enough to recognize herself by this time, doesn't it?

And yet, when you stop to think of it, is her inability to recognize her physical self any more remarkable than the common inability to recognize one's character self? Think how many, many people there are who live with themselves for a lifetime without seeming to have the slightest acquaintance with that inner self.

Everyone But Himself Expects Him To Be Late.

For instance, I know a man who is always late. He never will bestir himself until the last moment when hurry will not save him; he never will allow quite enough time to reach a place. Other people recognize this failing, and count upon it in making appointments with him. If it is necessary to have him at any place at a particular time they specify a time a half hour earlier, knowing that he is the only way to be sure. One would think that he, having had more experience with himself than anyone else, would realize that he is always late and expect it of himself. On the contrary, he is perennially surprised when he fails to get anywhere on time. He arrives breathless from his last-minute hurrying and assures you that he fully expected to be there in plenty of time, but that some unforeseeable accident kept him.

She Doesn't Know That She Is Super-Cautious.

Again, take the case of a certain woman who is abnormally cautious. Over and over again circumstances have proved her caution unnecessary, and yet she never learns to discount her fears. Indeed she has never been persuaded to admit that she is unusually cautious. I doubt if she realizes it. If she could see herself in a character mirror she would never recognize herself.

When we think how constantly we have to be with ourselves, how, in fact, day in, day out, through all the long years, we cannot get away from ourselves for a minute except when we are asleep (small wonder that people who suffer excessively from insomnia sometimes go insane), it certainly does seem as if we ought to get better acquainted with ourselves than most of us do.

With My Letter Friends.

Question—Is it a bold thing for a girl to do to invite a young man to her home to spend the evening with the whole family?

Answer—If the man has shown signs of wanting to call I can't see anything bold in the action. Quite to the contrary.

Question—I want to ask a question of my letter friends.

Some months ago a letter friend asked me to tell her the rules for a checker tournament. I went considerably out of my way to borrow a book on the subject and send her, requesting a prompt return. The book has not been sent back, and I have mislaid the address. I try to be courteous to my letter friends. Is it asking too much to expect courtesy in return?

aid of a horse-clipper into a very fair imitation of a lion. For all his vast size and strength, the mastiff is kindly in disposition and will not fight, unless it is absolutely necessary. Owing to his long wheel base and heavy body, he is no match for the bulldog or the collie, but like many another big bluff, his size keeps him from being imposed upon to any great extent.

The mastiff is used mainly as a decoration and as a plaything for children, being very durable and not easily broken by careless handling. If a mastiff can be trained to sleep before the staircase, he makes a very valuable protection against burglars, who almost invariably waken the family while trying to climb over him. In Belgium, mastiffs are used as, dray horses, thus being placed on the same social plane as Belgian women, and it is most interesting to see the faithful beast and the faithful wife hauling the loving husband home from market in a cart, the dog's feet being carefully protected by small shoes and the women's by their tough skin.

Mastiffs do not cost much when bought and can be boarded for less than the cost of boarding three hired men. Five or six pounds of meat will keep a mastiff contented and happy for several hours.

Irish Paper Will Support Redmond

New York, Jan. 26.—A weekly periodical, Ireland, one of whose professional objects is to champion the cause of John Redmond and his Irish Parliamentary party, has recently been established in New York. The first number appeared a short time after Daniel Boyle of Manchester, England, who represents North Mayo, an Irish constituency, in the British Parliament, had visited here.

On his recent trip, Mr. Boyle conferred with men active in the United Irish League, it is understood, about founding the new paper.

"Ireland will be first of all loyal to the Irish people, whose stand in the present war is exemplified by John Redmond, said J. C. Walsh, secretary of the Ireland publishing company. "Because he is standing by the British Government some of the Irish papers in this country have recently ceased their support of Redmond. The new periodical hopes to help convince Americans that the great body of Irishmen is loyal to Great Britain."

"However, the primary object of Ireland is not political. The home rule bill has been passed and will be in effect in a few years. We want the second and third generations of the Irish in this country to know something of the art, music, literature and history of the country of their fathers. Be assured, we shall not tempt them to waver in their Americanism. Ireland is not a paper for hyphenates."

The initial number of Ireland contained "A New Year's Greeting," from Mr. Redmond. "Your journal," he says, "will fulfill a most valuable and patriotic duty if it reflects in its columns what is really happening here at home on the soil of Ireland."

Dr. John G. Coyle, a physician of this city, is president of the Company.

Thos. Reilly of Philadelphia, vice-president and Stephen McFarland of New York is treasurer. Mr. Walsh, the Secretary recently came to New York from Montreal.

THE THOUGHT

THE NEW CHARTER.

The new charter prepared by the Civic Commission concerns only. The scope of its restrictions is confined to St. John's. I submit that it is not a charter that can be accepted by a House of Assembly. There are but six members present St. John's. It may be that a great many of the residents in St. John's, but it is their no authority to speak for citizens—they are in the House of Assembly. The present primarily the district which they have been elected. Only court to pass judgment on New Charter is the Hon. Mr. John's, who are directly affected by its proposals. To that end it is just and fair that the New Charter should be published, so that the people may obtain some idea of the which the Civic Commission recommends for the welfare of the city. It is not published now, it will March before it comes up for discussion in the House, and it will be "roaded" through before we where we are.

Now I am not saying this to harass the Civic Commission, from any opposition I feel to their work, which undoubtedly taken a great deal more time than any former Councilors could have done. No one knows what the New Charter contains, and it is good, it may be bad, it may be indifferent. At any rate, it has no real value if the citizens of St. John's do not endorse it. I request for its publication reasonable one. If the Commission have no authority to publish it, then ask the Government to do so. In most cities a referendum is on such a vitally important issue. How our House of Assembly can decide it for the City of St. John's cannot see, however, it is have the New Charter published.

CIVIC FINANCES.

The list of bonuses and salaries of Municipal officials has been lately and has met the usual criticism. If work has been done, don't think that anyone objects to workers being well paid. I think that it would be cash if instead of bonuses being given, salary was made to suit the times. These days no one objects to seeing men getting increases, but I mean that a man with a family dependent upon him should receive a higher salary than a man is unmarried and who has no family dependent upon him. If they are at the same kind of work and performs it as well as the other family man deserves and is entitled to a higher remuneration than the other man. Perhaps we might go a little further and say that, even if the family man does not have a wife, he is best with the capabilities of his best with the capabilities of his family man deserves and is entitled to a higher salary. But while we are at it, let us have a business.

But to return to the Council, there are two things I have to mention. One concerns the turned-down application of Mr. Fogarty for a salary increase. I have been in his little office and we are to judge a man by his work. He must be one of the most capable, neat, careful and "do-it-right" in this city. His desk seems to shine with cleanliness. And I made inquiries.
