

The Foster Brother; The Orphan of the Wreck.

CHAPTER XIV. A HAPPY MORNINGS—A VISIT TO THE SCENES—SEPARATION.

It was August, and the weather was gloriously bright and warm. Harry and Caroline were married, and were spending the honeymoon at Millport—George being with them.

Some of our readers may not know that Millport is a town of considerable size, built round the shore of a circular bay, on the southwest side of the larger Cumberland. Those who know it as it at present exists may consider that it was not a quiet place for the newly wedded pair to retire to for the enjoyment of the first draft of their cup of matrimonial bliss.

But Millport in the month of August now, is very unlike the Millport of thirty years ago. It had not then become the large and much-frequented watering-place it now is. At that time a few houses round the harbor constituted almost the entire town.

Ob, the joy and the happiness experienced during this sunny August by Harry and Caroline! It was, perhaps, as near an approach to Eden before the fall as mortals have since enjoyed; and if it could have lasted all their lives through, the phrase "six cursed and sorrow-laden earths" could have no meaning to them.

George sometimes accompanied them in their rambles; occasionally he walked away in another direction by himself, that he might leave them to the exquisite sweetness of their own society. Not that they had any wish that it should be so—they did not feel his presence any restraint, so closely were the affections of all three entwined round each other.

It would be untrue to say that George had not been greatly affected by the discovery made through the reading of the packet. He said to Harry and Caroline that he did not intend to allow the matter to annoy him greatly or dwell heavily on his mind; and at the time he spoke he fully believed it would be so.

His brooding thoughts were, of course, intensified by the sight of the region in which the wreck had taken place, for, seated on the rocks, at the extremity of Exland Point, he had on the opposite side a full view of the ruined castle of Port Crawford, and knew that the coast immediately beyond was the scene of the catastrophe.

He meant to go over some day in a small boat, and Harry and Caroline were to accompany him, to visit the place; to see the rocks on which the ship struck; the house in which Kenneth and Lucy resided at the time; and above all, to visit his mother's grave. But he had not then become such an institution at Millport as it has now, but it would not be difficult to hire one of the fishing-boats for a day for this purpose.

EQUITABLE LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.—The following is from the Monetary Times: "Some time ago we called attention to the astonishing progress made by this Society in 1871, but it now appears that the current year's business will immensely exceed that of any previous one. In the six months ending July 1st, no less than 4,467 policies were issued, insuring the sum of $27,681,775! This is a larger business than was done by any other company—with a single exception—in the United States, during the whole of 1871. In view of the hostile criticism to which the Equitable has been subjected this year, and the determined efforts that have been put forth by interested parties to damage its reputation of late, the success indicated by the foregoing figures may be described as a great victory. It proves that the management may well be proud. It proves that the Society has the full and unreserved confidence of the people." Mr. W. J. Paterson is agent for this Company.

The Largest of any Company in the World.

This Society has led the van in the Insurance world for many years; it has introduced more improvements and given greater impetus to the business than any Life Company in the United States, and is deserving in this respect of the praise and gratitude of the community.

There are many reasons for selecting the Equitable Life Assurance Society.

1st—No company has such large annual transactions, liberally infusing into its business a constant accession of fresh and selected lives which is one of the greatest elements of strength.

2nd—Liberality in dealing with all claims: observing at the same time, a due regard to the interests of its present large body of policy-holders by a firm resistance to any attempt at imposition.

3rd—Perfect organization in every department, which renders official information easily attainable and secures a complete administration of its affairs.

4th—Being one of the most progressive institutions of its kind in the world, it is ever prepared to seize at once upon all the improvements in the business that science can suggest.

The Equitable Life Assurance Society issues every recognized form of policy, and especially the FONTINE SAVINGS FUND INSURANCE which the Company introduced. This plan has become very popular, as equalling among all who are insured under its advantages which arise from the profits of the business, without in any respect infringing upon the normal results for which Life Insurance was first instituted.

The EQUITABLE feels that it has the strongest claims upon public confidence. Under the management that distinguishes it and the principles by which it is guided, perfect security is given for the future, than which no greater inducement can be held out to all who wish to insure their lives.

Further information regarding the different kinds of Policies issued by the Society can readily be obtained at

THE COMPANY'S OFFICES, 120 Broadway, New York, Or from any of its representatives throughout the United States and Canada.
