Coming back to the Calgary eleven. Melville and Dickenson played much better together than up in Edmonton, and made a good pair of defenders, one that would be hard to beat.

Sutton, in goal, had a holiday, and throughout the game he had only to handle about two times. The forwards in the first seemed a little strange, and did not play at all well together until after Stan Wakelyn had headed through the first goal. Then they seemed to tumble to one another's play, and that was the time they made matters hot for Edmonton.
