Dr. Stanfield, of Indianapolis, officiated at the Epworth League anniversary services held yesterday at Center Methodist Church. His Dundas sermons pleased large congregations at both services.

NEW PROPOSITION PROBABLE. The finance committee met the city solicitor and Secretary Welch, of the London and Southwestern Traction Company, Saturday night, upon the question of the company's application for a franchise. Progress will be re-ported at tonight's meeting of the city council, and it is likely that the company will make a new proposition.

SIXTH ANNIVERSARY. The sixth anniversary of the establishment of the York Street Mission was celebrated yesterday at the three regular services. Mr. George Couke and Mrs. George Cathcart conducted the morning and afternoon services respectively, while in the evening addresses were given by Evangelist Belcher, leader of the mission, together with Rev. J. H. Orme, W. H. Liddi-coatt, Hudson Abbott, Mrs. George Boyd and George McBroom.

TWILIGHT ORGAN RECITAL. The twilight organ recital given on Saturday afternoon at Dundas Center Methodist Church by Prof. Alexander Thompson, of Lincoln University, was not as well attended as it should have been, as it proved a decided musical treat. The programme included the following artistic numbers: Lemmen's "March Pontificale," Silas' "Andante in C," and Bach's "Chromatic Fantasy in D Minor," Other selections rendered were "Communini in G," (Salome), "Meditation" (Guilmant), "Fanfare" (Lemmens), "In Para-"Fanfare" (Lemmens), "In Para-dasum" (Dubois), Miss Eva Roblyn assisted with two vocal solos, "Hear My Prayer" (Lozzi), and "I Lay Me Down in Peace" (Bach).

EVANGELIST'S HOUSE ROBBED. Burglars last night entered the residence of Evangelist T. L. Belcher, at 122 Bruce street, while Mr. and Mrs. Belcher were absent conducting services at the York Street Mission. burglars removed a pane of glass from the back kitchen window, unfastened the catch and raised the sash. They then ransacked the house thoroughly, securing two gold watches, a pair of opera glasses, two pocketbooks, containing money, and a silver medal awarded to Mrs. T. Belcher in 1884, as being the best lady driver at the Western Fair.

WEDDED AT CLACHAN.

Rodney Mercury: "A beautiful home wedding took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John McLeod, Clachan, on Wednesday evening, 15th inst., when their daughter, Annie, was united in marriage to Mr. Albert Blue, a wellto-do and popular young farmer of Orford. The service was performed by Rev. J. W. Mann, of Rodney, in the presence of about 50 relatives. The beautiful and happy appearance of the contracting parties were subjects of general remarks. The bride was attired cream silk trimmed with applique and chiffon, and carried a bouquet of white bridal roses, smilax and ferns. The bridesmaid, Miss Anna Bella Campbell, of London (cousin of the bride), was dressed in white dimity, and carried a bouquet of white and pink carnatons. Mr. James Blue, of Orford, cousin of the groom, acted as his support. The present were numerous, costly and very useful. After congratulations and a most excellent supper. Mr. and Mrs. Blue took the Lake Erie train for Hamilton Toronto, and carry with them the best wishes of their large circle of friends

F. C. Whitney's Big Opera Company, "When Johnny Comes Marching Home," Arrived on Sunday.

To the lovers of wholesome spectacular opera comique, sung by artists of merit and gorgeously presented, nothing will be found to compare with the entirety embodied in the Whitney Opera Company, which comes to the Grand tonight in "When Johnny Comes Marching Home." Mr. F. C. Whitney has given to the public some of the most telling musical productions on record, but in this work, it is said, he will reach the top notch of stage realism. The orchestra will be under the direction of Mr. Wm. Maquinn, and will be augmented for the occasion.

Questions Answered.

FARMER.-Mr. Farmer invests $100 in an outfit for making butter, and Mr. Capitalist invests $20,000 for the same purpose. Why has the cipitalist any more right to label his butter "creamery butter" than the farmer? Ans.-The capitalist has a creamery and the farmer has not. The making of butter is only incidental to his farming. Creamery butter means butter made at a creamery, not at a farm, although by the same process.

Miss Gooderham Loses Necklace Worth $8,000.

Mother and Her Little Daughter Charged With Shoplifting.

Toronto, Oct. 20.—The police learned last night that on Friday evening last, about the time John Drynan's house was burglarized and $1,000 worth of jewelry taken, the same operation was performed on the palatial residence of eorge Gooderham, corner Bloor and St. George streets, and a very valuable diamond necklace belonging to Miss Gooderham, valued at $8,000, taken. Mr. and Mrs. Gooderham were away, but the servants during the evening discovered Miss Gooderham's empty jewel cases strewn about her room until the family returned last night.

CHARGED WITH SHOPLIFTING. Nearly $1,100 in cash was found in the possession of Augusta Laubeg, who, with her 10-year-old daughter, Mary, were arrested Saturday night on charges of shoplifting in the depart-mental stores. The arrests are the outcome of an investigations by the police lasting several days. The pris-oners were taken to the Court street station, where Mrs. Laubeg was searched by the police matron, who found the purse containing $1,063. The money consisted of three $100 bills. four fifties and the balance in $10 and

The detectives afterwards visited the woman's apartments and removed three bundles of wearing apparel, all of which is believed to have been stolen from the departmental stores. Mrs. Lauberg, who is a widow, says the money found on her is the savings of several years. She claims to have made the cash doing housework in New York City and Germany. Few of the men who have known him on a previous visit to New York him this time. Fewer of them would have spoken to him if he had tried to address them. But the happylooking Englishman did not object to their manner. The more completely they ignored him the better he was pleased. He wants New York to forget him, and if he could, he woulld happily lose all memory of it. The few men who saw him in New York when he was passing through town on his way to take up a name that was well known and brought with it wealth and other responsibilities, recalled him as the central figure in an episode that was confined almost entirely to the knowledge of the members of the club in whose house it occurred. He could scarcely have been described as the hero of the affair, since his role in it was far from heroic. It was really nearer the vil-He had been known by another name when he was first in New York. His arrival in New York then, more than seven years ago, had been nearly as quiet as it was now. He coming from his own country at that time, and it seemed to him as if he might never go back. This thought did not trouble him, because he had missed the opportunities that England had afforded to him. He had been through nearly every discreditable experience possible there. A particularly scandalous gambling debt had incensed his father and his family so that there was no mercy for him from them, and there was not even toleration from his friends.Coming after a series of especially flagrant episodes on the turf, a gambling scandal in which he was implicated had brought his career in his own country to and end. He had nothing to live on but the allowance his father On the continent too many persons knew him, and his assumed name neither concealed his identity nor gave him the independence he expected. America seemed the place best suited to his needs, and here the young man came, assuming, for purposes not difficult to understand still another name. He landed here with a wardrobe suited to a gentleman and his own natural charm of person and manners. He had always been an athlete, and in spite of a life that did not encourage health, he did not encourage with him, and as nothing helps a man to social importance here so much as skill in certain athletics, he found himself, after a short time, taken up by persons of the kind he wanted to meet. He was known by the name he had selected, and a few of the men asked more about him. They put him up at a few clubs, and after awhile he might have been asked to meet the womer now only the associate of the men. Unluckily there came to the club at which he was a guest and a frequent attendant, a countryman whom knew. What was more serious for the stranger was the fact that this man, who had married an American woman, whose family was quite as good as his own, had no reason to like him and knew his whole discreditable history. So the certainty of coming trouble occurred to him as soon as he entered the club house one day and to his dismay saw the latest arrival.

The decent Englishman could not

One of the guests at a city hotel last | of delayed remittances, drafts that had miscarried, and similar expedients to raise money had been tried by the earlier guest. For many reasons he did not want to be investigated until he had the chance to make one more attempt to borrow money he never intended to repay. Luck had against him at cards and he had lost nearly every bet he had made for a So he would have to get the money somewhere before quitting the city. And he saw that result was im-

He decided on his course of action almost as soon as he saw the man likely to cause him so much trouble. He determined to deny any statement that he was any other than the man he pretended to be. And as he was known under an assumed name that belonged to nobody he had ever heard of, he determined to maintain that he was not traveling under anybody else's name. The expected happened sooner even than he feared. That evening he was asked to meet two of the men who had invited him to the club as a guest, and they put before him the story the later arrival had told. There was no quesunder an assumed name and an outcast from every decent club in London to which his family position had entitled him to belong. These facts were put frankly before the Englishman, more in sorrow than in anger. He denied them absolutely in exactly the same frame of mind. The men thanked him, parted after shaking hands, and announced that they were determined to make other man apologize for such an injustice to a good fellow. The effort was made and the other man promptly refused to make any apology. He said that he had known "And to prove it," said he, "the fellow has on his right arm a snake tattooed in black. It is just above the wrist. Ask him to show you that arm."

Then he added to this explanation some interesting details of the young man's career which made even the men who liked him best determined to investigate the truth. Already stories about the delayed remittances and the lost checks were floating about the And even that afternoon one of his friends in the club had promised to let him have several hundred dollars more the next day.

So once more the guest was called to meet some of his friends and explain. Four of the men in the club who had known him best met him around a table in a small room. He was as cool as usual, and as cleareyed, and he denied every charge with the same boyish earnest and apparent frankness. to the stranger.

"Mr. X— tells us," said this man,

Every man at the table leaned forward. There was revealed a wiry muscular forearm, but it was guiltless of any marks. With a look of triumph the vindicated arose from his chair. He remained a few minutes longer in the room and then departed. All but one of the men shook hands with him. One stood aloof and bowed distantly to the Englishman as he started to friend was an imposter. "I don't see the matter in that light," said the one man who had refused to give his hand to the guest; "that man is every bit as much of faker as he has been called and he fooled all of you but me." There was a loud protest

"Fooled you all, I say, but me," repeated the speaker. "And I saw no use in making a disturbance at this stage of the game. We will never see him again.' Protests against this statement concerning one who had just vindicated his good name grew louder and were made in stronger phrases. "Don't talk to me about what you fellows were too blind to see," continued the speaker. "The fellow never showed his right arm when we challenged him about the tattoo mark. It was his left arm he showed. It was a clever trick, done so quickly and apparently with so little premeditation that it took in three men who are usually wide awake enough about the affairs of this life. That shows what a scamp the chap is.' The three men looked at one another in astonishment and then the truth flashed on every one of them. It was the man's left arm that they had seen. The charge was that the tattoo mark was on the right arm. They had been taken in by a trick that ought not to have fooled a child. The central figure in this scene never appeared again at the club. Nor did he write a line to any of the men with whom he had been on such friendly terms until more than two years had Then one of them received a check for the amount of a loan. Two others, later, had the same experience. Then to the man who had put him up at the club came the amount of his house charges there. All of these checks were on a bank in the City of Mexico. Once a story that the Englishman was working there in the silver mines reached New York. But

The death, which was reported in the newspapers, recalled the man and his New York stay to those who had known him best. He had nothing to fear from meeting the friends he had made then as he was no longer under any obligation to them that money would not repay. But perhaps it was as well that he went back to take his name-his real one this time -without putting himself in the way of seeing them. When It Started.

George Thompson, the Kentucky attorney who is credited with caring more for a fine horse than a fat fee, tells a story that illustrates the primitive ideas of a quiet life that once prevailed in the Blue Grass region, relates a writer in the New York Times.

It seems that there had been a fight and that several persons had been killed before quiet was restored. An old woman who lived in the house before which the fight occurred was called as a witness. She was not anxious to testify, but when asked to tell what she knew of the trouble, said:

"There was a passel of men in front of my house, jedge, and they began quarreling. George Bowen called Ike Smaley a liar, and Ike just naturally knocked George down. Then Tom Saunders, who was always quick-tempered like, he cut like with a knife. He cut him purty bad, too, for it made two of Ike's friends pull their guns an shoot Tom up a lot. Some tion. It would finally decide what they were waiting so to hear.

If they had known him better they would have seen the expression on his face change suddenly. He had no idea that the man from London knew this, or that anybody would try to identify him by the marks on his too, for it made two of Ike's friends pull their guns an' shoot Tom up a lot. Some of Tom's friends pulled out knives and some others got guns, and there was some more talk, an'—the fuss thing I knew they begun fightin'."

Two Blessings.

The Paris letter in the Philadelphia Post tells of the two blessings of western civilization it is the ambition of an American-educated Japanese girl to take home to her land. It was at one of M. Delcasse's receptions in the ministry for foreign affairs. She came with the Japa-nese ambassador's party, and she was winsome as a flower, this delicate Japanese girl—oh, an amber girl!—dressed in the silken splender of her race. There-fore it was almost uncanny to hear her talk with a down-east accent. When you

gasped she said:
"Why, I'm a Wellesley girl, you know."

"And you are going home?"
"Yes, back to Japan."
The small face grew very serious.
"I want to teach my people two things when I get back," she said-"ice cream and the Gospel."

Foreigners' Mistakes. Among the stories about errors in English, the Los Angeles Times tells the following: "Many ludicrous mistakes are made by foreigners in grasping the meaning of some of our common English expressions. A young German attending the State University translated 'The spirit is willing, but the fiesh is weak,' into 'The ghost is willing, but the meat is not able.' And a Filipino youth fairly set the class in an uproar by the statement that 'Out of sight, out of mind meant 'The invisible is insane.' A class of little second grade scholars had been learning the lines 'However it be, it seems to me,' etc., repeating it together as a class, until, as the teacher thought, it was well learned. One day she asked it was well learned. One day she asked a little girl to recite it alone, and Bea-trice, proud of the distinction, declared that "'However it be, it seems to me,

"Tis only noble to be good.
Kind hearts are more than corn or nuts,
