His landlady was awakened by a shot to the chest, and his body was found lying on the floor with a bullet wound in his right side, and a revolver lying nearby. He died shortly afterwards in a hospital.

The clerk at the Hotel America, where the young man once lived, told the police that Balasino's parents were wealthy, his father being a member of the firm of Balasino Bros., owners of extensive sugar plantations. Among the memoranda in his room were notes showing that his expenses from June 19 to July 4 had been $448. A letter apparently written by another said that no more money would be sent to him unless he returned to his school in Poughkeepsie.
