"Protection" For Your Home—No "Free Trade" With Decay

Everything with a surface needs surface protection. Not only the outside of your home, but every part of the inside—the floors, walls, furniture, woodwork and metal parts.

To paint, means protection and preservation and money saved on repairs, for wear and decay always start at the surface.

To leave a surface unprotected by paint or varnish, means "free trade" with decay and waste.

"We must be careful not to pauperize," say some comfortable wiseacres. We pension, Royalty, noblemen, statesmen, judges, civil servants, industrial magnates, army and naval officers, all in receipt of good salaries during their lives. Is there any reason why our widowed mothers with young children should not be pensioned? Thirty-three bishops and archbishops in the House of Lords in England draw large pensions for practically doing nothing but opposing progressive measures introduced for the amelioration of the lot of the poor. Would anyone suggest that these noble lords are being pauperized by their pensions?

The Mothers' Pension Act aims to protect the home as the center of human life and activity. We hold that the family ties, deeply embedded as they are in the laws of nature and life, are the greatest source of the strength, morality and stability of the social order, and should not be broken. We aim to direct the money now spent on matrons and institutions to the maintenance of the child in its proper environment, the home, to employ the mother to bring up her own children in her own home, instead of a matron in an institution. We aim to save tax payers and philanthropists half the money now paid by keeping children in their own home at half the expense. Nations have risen to power and eminence and have fallen, because the children, mothers and homes of the masses were not taken into account, and nations will again rise and fall until we recognize that no nation can be great until built on the stable foundation of good, strong men and women. That foundation must be built in the home; by the motherhood and childhood of the nation. Let our watchword be "save the nation!"

The church and nation proclaim the sanctity of the home. To subsidize the dependent mother to carry out her parental duties in the home, is but putting our beliefs, which we admit to be right, into practical form, applying our Christianity.

The injustice to the child we can never estimate. Thousands of fatherless children are sent out into the world annually unfitted, both in mind and body to earn a living. These untrained, unskilled boys and girls, half-educated, and often half-nourished, soon become the prey of older and more worldly companions. Untrained in business or ways of city life they seem to be plastic material for these chance undesirable acquaintances; and before long they are brought up in the juvenile or police courts, and the step to the jail and penitentiary is but a short and often an easy one.

It is not possible for a mother, and her assistants, to generate mother love or give individual care. They are not there to perform that service, nor could they if they wish. Their duty is to run the institution as cleanly and as cheaply as possible; institutions are rarely, if ever, overburdened with any surplus save a surplus of mouths to feed it most; it is either the food or the service which must be economized on.

The widowed mother with the helpless family should count the pity and admiration of every right-thinking man and woman; yet what is the treatment meted out to her by society today? When the support of the father is lost the home is destroyed, the children are placed in different institutions according to age and rule, and the mother is left childless. This is a real cruelty to the mother and a terrible disadvantage to the children, and the fact that poverty alone enforces these conditions is a stain on the nation.

One there be so crueler or more unhuman or unchristian way of dealing with a mother than to separate her from her children through no fault of her own with only poverty as an excuse. The good men and women of the South rose up in their might and beat slavery out of the country, and one of their greatest grievances was the separation of the children from their mothers, yet nearly all over this country we are separating mothers from their children, breaking ties that were made by either Church or State, and above all else secret and dividing separating these mothers from their children, and the children from the one human being above all others who loves them the most, and not this alone, but the children from one another—depriving them from God's greatest gift to mankind—home love of mothers and brothers and sisters.

The mothers of the poor love their children intensely. They are all they have in life, their only comfort, their only hope, the only thing which brightens and makes life worth striving for, what tongue or pen can describe the feeling of these mothers whose children would never have been taken from them had it not been for poverty? The world sees little of their sorrow, like their love, is deep and to sacred for the cold, cruel, critical world to let see. They are sensitive—their poverty, crushes, and makes them so—they suffer in silence, knowing from experience that they will receive but cold comfort heard so often the note of blame and censure for their poverty, their ignorance, their inertia and degeneracy, they keep silent.

WOMAN MISSED

THE LAST BERTH

Took Her About 15 Minutes To Tell How Badly She Felt.

"I want a nice lower berth in the middle of the Pullman," said the middle-aged lady with the somewhat agitated look, some ladies always assume when they are travelling.

"Sorry, ma'am; but the berths are taken," replied the ticket agent with no marked sign of grief on his face, his whole interest seeming to be focused on a pear he was peeling.

"What! All the berths are taken?"

"Yes, I sold the last one not more than five minutes ago."

"And I suppose that it was a lower berth, too?"

"Yes, 'twas."

"And if I had been here five or six minutes sooner I could have had it?"

"You sure could."

"Who got it?"

"Some man."

"Do you suppose that you could get him to take an upper berth and let me—"

"There are no upper berths to be had. Every berth in the car is taken."

"And it hasn't been more than five minutes, since you sold the last berth?"

"Not longer than that."

"Well, if that isn't too provoking! I stopped at a store to get something I could just as well have done without and it took them so long to make change! I told the girl who waited on me that I was in a hurry to get a train, but you know that never makes any difference to one of those shop girls, and here if I had been only five minutes earlier I could have had that nice lower berth? You say that it is only about five minutes since it was taken?"

"That's all, ma'am."

"And I told my sister whom I have been visiting that I was afraid I would be late and I wanted to come away without any of the dessert she had made for luncheon, but she said she had made it especially for me, because it was something she knew I was fond of. It was coffee mousse, but, my goodness, I would rather never have seen any more coffee mousse than to have missed getting that berth. And you say it was taken not more than five minutes ago?"

"It's nearer 15 minutes now."

"Well, but you said that it was only five minutes when I first came to the window, and I could have been here 10 minutes earlier just as well as not if I hadn't waited for that dessert I didn't need, and then gone into that store to get something I could have waited until I got home to get. I think I could have got here in time to get that berth anyhow if they hadn't been so long making change in that store, and here I have an all-night and all-day and all-night ride before me, and you say that there is not a berth to be had. Do you suppose any holder of a berth will be likely to be giving it up?"

"It isn't likely, with the train starting in seven minutes."

"My soul, does it start that soon?"

"And I haven't checked my trunk yet! Of course I ought to have ordered the berth in advance, but I didn't expect to go home until the end of the week. Then I got a letter that made me change my mind; but even then—and you say that it is only five minutes since that last berth was taken? I do think that—where is the baggage room?"

"If I had only been five minutes earlier, I could have—in which direction did you say that baggage room was?"

Sometimes a little white lie does a lot of good.

"So dark and yet so light," said the funny man as he looked at a top of coal the driver had just delivered.

A Labor Saving Combination

"It is the last straw that breaks the camel's back." So runs the old proverb. And it is the little extra efforts which fire you out on wash-day.

Eddy's Indurated Fibreware Washboards form a combination which save you much extra labor. Indurated Fibreware tubs are much easier to lift and to move about. They keep the water hot for a much longer space of time, because they do not conduct heat so much. They are easier to keep clean, because they are made in one piece without joint or seam, and the hard, glazed surface is impervious to liquids or odors. And they cost no more. Last longer, too.

Eddy's Twin Better Washboard has a double rubbing surface of Indurated Fibreware which loosens the dirt quickly and saves many tire-some motions.
