[A Hymn,

When gethering clouds around I view.

And ays are dark, and friends are tew, On into I rean, who not in vain Experienced every human pain: He sens my wants, allays my fears, And counts and treasures up my tes

If anght should tempt my soul to stray, From heavenly wisdom's narrow way, "In flee the good I would pursue, Or do the sin I would not do! Still He who felt temptation's power, thall guard me in that dangerous hour.

It wounded leve my bosom swell, Descrived by those Liprized too well, He shall his pitying aid bearow. Who fell on earth severe, woe—At once betrayed, denied, or find, By those that shared his daily bread.

When vexing thoughts within me rise, And sore dismayed, my sprit dies.
Yet be, who once vouchs led to bear
The sickening anguish of despair
Shall sweetly southe, shall gently dry,
The brobbing heart, the streaming eye

When sorrewing n'er some stone I bend, Which covers all that was a friend—And from his hand, his voice, his anile, Divides me for a little while—My seviour marks thetears I shed, For' Jesus' wept o'er Laz rus dead.

And oh! when I have safely passed 'Through every conflict but the last, Sull. Lord! utchanging, watch beside My dying bed, for thou hast died. Then point to realms of cloudless day, And wipe the latest tears away.

Upwards of two years since, the benefits of a west like, that proposed shore, were publicly suggested by its author. Though approved of generally and formbly reiterated by a talented gantleman of the M-chanicis Institute, the suggestion was not followed up by a practical effort, and as the want which was then felt is daily becoming more ungent,—the subscriber has been judged to proper a small work which he trusts will supply the deficiency. The object kept in view has been to afford assistance to those who are engaged p the honourable task of instructing the rising generation, in their of forts to inculcate a branch of knowledge with which all should be intimately acquainted—to present to
