The knout is a very heavy thong, as thick as a man's wrist, and weighing from two to three pounds; the lash is of leather, about the breadth of a broad tape, and narrowing at the end; and the handle is about two feet long.

The place usually chosen at St. Petersburg for the public infliction of the knout, is an open muddy plain, near the river Neua, and the execution is always attended with a military guard of Cossacks and other troops. As soon as the culprit arrives at the platform, a paper is read aloud, which contains a description of his orime, and the sentence of the court before which he has been tried.

It ordinary cases, the criminals, each in their turn, are fastened to an inclined post, having a ring at the top, to which the head is so tightly fixed, by means of a rope, as to prevent the patient from crying out. The hands are then closely tied on either side, and at the bottom the feet are secured by means of woring; the back is then bared to the waist, and the executioner commences his duty.

The abbe Chappe of Auteroche relates an execution of a female in the letter men. Mother, do not chide your boys have all grown up, and left the next, and the next step will be, running and the executioner commences his duty.

The abbe Chappe d'Auteroche relates an execution of a female in the reign of Elizabeth. He states, that Madame Lapookin, who was one of the most beautiful women belonging to the court of that empress, had been indiscreet enough to mention some of the endless amours of her imperial mistress, and was therefore condemned to undergo the knout.

object of such preparations. One of the executioners pulled off a cloak which covered her bosom, at which her modesty took alarm; she started back, turned pale, and burst into tears. Her clothes were soon stripped off, and she was naked to the waist before the eager eyes of an immense concourse of people, profoundly silent. Two of the executioners then took her by the hands, and turning her half round, raised her on their backs, inclining forwards, and lifting her a little from the wards, and lifting her a little from the ground; upon which another execu-tioner adjusted her on the backs of his tioner adjusted her on the backs of his coadjutors, and placed her in the most proper posture for receiving the punishment.
