PROTECTION AGAINST ACCIDENT. According to the evidence led at the coroner's inquest into the circumes attending the death of the ener killed in the C.P.R. wreck at dbank, the accident fell distinctly. within the class of the preventable. The proximate cause appears to have again been the improper opening of a switch and the absence of the light that should have warned the engineer of the danger point. As usual, there was a rule read that when a light was out where there should have been one, or was improperly displayed, it should be regarded as a stop signal. But, as was recently pointed out in a published letter, there is another rule on some rail-
