A special meeting of the directors of Wells, Fargo & Co. was held in San Francisco for the purpose of electing a successor to the late John J. Valentine, for many years president of the big express company, but after a somewhat protracted discussion of the situation it was decided to delay the election of a president until the annual meeting next summer. The title of acting president was conferred upon Dudley Evans, and, while continuing to hold the office and title of second vice-president, he will be the executive head of the corporation with practically the same authority as that exercised by President John J. Valentine before his death.

The new acting president has been identified with the company since 1871, in which year he went to California from Virginia, where he had taken a prominent part in the civil war as a Confederate officer. He was first sent to Victoria to represent the company, and later was made agent at Portland, where he acted as supervising agent for Oregon and Washington.
