Two men were standing outside a jewell-er's window, admiring the gorgeous dis-play of glittering gems that lay before them. Presently one of them, pointing to an object in a red plush trap, said :--

Just look at that scarf-pin representing a fly. Anyone can tell that's not real.' 'Well. I should think so,' answered his Halifar, Ma-. 30, by Rev. F. H. Almon, Berg Major Hugh Mitchell to Lause Wasson.

"Well, I should think so," answered his friend. 'Whotver saw a common fly with such a bright spparance? Why, it makes me weary when I think that the jew-eller who produced that fondly hoped that scance would purchase it to deceive his triends. It I saw that on a man's scarf I could tell directly that it was enamelled imitation.' Argvie Head, Mar. 27, by Rev. M. W. Br Thomas F. Hatfield to Fannie M. Tinkham Thomas C. Rose to Margarit L. When daylight came a number of man, Martin Reynolds in the advance, succeeded in cutting a track to the top of the enbank meent. From this point the train was nearly hidden, and before and behind, far as the eye could reach, was one wast snow-level.

as the eye could reach, was one vast snow-lyel. Martin 'Beynolds had learned that there was food enough on the train to last the people for that day; now he saw that many days must elapse before thay could be reached, if indeed their whereabouts be learned by these anxious for their safety. 'I wish we only had a telegraph operator and instruments on board, we might send word where we are and how we're fixed,' said the conductor. 'While you're wishing,' said the engineer. 'th costs no more to wish out of this scrape. Can't you see that the telegraph lines are all down?'

Il down ?' "Come with me, help me to dig up one of the wires-all of the wires,' said Martin Beynolds, himself setting the example. "What good will that do?" asked the sendactor, working like a beaver, neverbeless. "I am a telegraph engineer, and under-tand operating," replied Martin Reynolds. "But you have no instrument to send or somve a message?" "Trust me." was the reply.

fore darkness came entirely he made his way to a ranchman's house, where he was cordially welcome for the night. The re-tal lowell, a daughter. cordially welcome for the night. The remainder of the story in Judge Usborn's words goes as follows :

'The house was one of a familiar plaine type, being a big, one-room affair, built of sod. At one end was a freplace, which served alike for giving warmth and cook-ing, and included in the rest of the furmiture was one solitary bedstead. Insa-much as the family consisted of the min and wife and six small children. I soon Commenced to wonder where they all slept, and what manager of provision could be made for myself, the guest. After the chores had been done and After the chores had been done and the ranchman had made his stock safe for the night we all sat down to a good ranch the night we all sat down to a good ranch supper. After supper we men drew up to the fireplace and smeked our pipes while the woman cleared up the supper diales. The evening passed pleasantly, and about 9 o'elock the mother prepared three of the ohildren for bed, after which abe tracked them into the only bedstead in the house. They went of to sleep presently, and then she carefully removed them from the bed and sat them up against the wall close to the fireplace, after which she pat the three
