STORMY SCENES MARKED THE CAMORRIST TRIAL

Continued from page 1. Viterro, May 2.—The trial of the Camorrista opened this morning with Abbateaglio still on the stand. The informer, whose statements had been attacked by the defence on the ground that he was not wholly responsible mentally denied that he was subject to epileptic fits. He proceeded to describe the different positions held in the Camorra by the prisoners, and said that those who had denied membership really occupied high offices in the society.

He named Corrado Sortino, as one of the actual assassins of Cuccolo, and Sortino was summoned from the cage to confront the accuser. Standing before the bar the carliniers between them, the two men glared at each other for a moment, when Abbateaglio continued. He surprised all with his graphic description, and going into minute details gave the days and hours of each event, from its inception to the commitment of the criminal. He declared everything that Sortino had said in his examination was false. Occasionally, when interrupted, he bowed with mock deference to Sortino and remarked: "But you know better than I do, as you were there."

At one point the technicalities of killing were involved in dispute. Abbateaglio had taken a revolver from the judge's bench and used it as a weapon to illustrate the knife thrust that ended the life of Cuccolo when Sortino interrupted. "It is impossible to murder any man when holding a knife as you are holding that revolver."

George B. McClellan, during whose tenure of office as mayor of New York, Detective Petrosino was murdered in Italy, was an interested spectator at the trial today. At the conclusion of the session when the prisoners, handcuffed and chained were taken from the court room, and placed in the prison vans, some of them who had been in America appeared to recognize Mr. McClellan, and one addressing him in English said: "We are innocent."

FIVE CHILDREN BURNED TO DEATH IN MEGANTIC FIRE

Quebec, May 2.—In a fire which destroyed their parents' home in St. Sophie, Megantic County, five children perished late on Sunday night. Saint Sophie is a small parish in a remote section of the Lake Megantic region and the fatal fire occurred in the second range of the parish, burning to the ground the house of Phil Patry, causing the death of five of his children.

With his wife, Patry had gone to visit relatives in another part of the parish and on their return late at night the parents found their home in flames, and notwithstanding all their efforts they could not save the unfortunate little ones, whose charred remains were found yesterday among the debris. Mr. Patry's loss through fire is heavy. His household furniture, provisions and 3,000 pounds of maple sugar, were destroyed and he had no insurance.

semply chamber of the parliament buildings. The decorations of the chamber were most elaborate and imposing while the military guard kept watch through the day and night.

The funeral tomorrow will be a most impressive one, and already representatives from all the provinces are arriving to attend it.

RUSHING THE WETO BILL IN THE COMMONS

Continued from page 1. It will be observed that Mr. Oliver begins by speaking of the attempt to suggest a connection between "the land transaction and my bank account." Observe that from that onwards he devotes his entire attention to the land grant. And observe that he never makes an attempt to inquire into any charge relating to "the transaction mentioned." Singular number, you notice, not a word of the bank account.

Important Clauses of Bill To Limit Power Of House Of Lords Passed Yesterday— Closure Again Applied.

London, May 2.—After the application of closure, clause two of the Parliament bill, which is the most important clause of the government measure for the curtailment of the powers of the House of Commons to amend bills, was carried in the House of Commons to-night by a majority of 195. Later clause three of the bill providing that "any certificate of the Speaker of the House of Commons given under this act shall be conclusive for all purposes and shall not be questioned in any court of law," was carried after closure, 255 to 132.

During the course of the debate on clause two, the government agreed to accept one or two minor amendments, moved by the opposition, but rejected all which would weaken the scope of the clause. This clause relates to any bill other than a money bill, and provides that if any such bill is passed by the House of Commons, in three successive sessions and is rejected by the House of Lords at each of these sessions, it shall become an act of parliament on the royal assent.

Before the vote was taken, Winston Spencer Churchill, the home secretary said that adoption of the clause was imperative, because it had come about complete paralysis of the working constitution and denial of all form of redress to those which did not belong to the Conservative party.

Mr. Balfour, leader of the opposition, declared that the real purpose of the bill was not improvement of the constitution of the House of Lords, but the removal of the House of Lords from the scene of the political struggle.

THE SYDNEY MURDER CASE.

Sydney, May 2.—A. D. Gunn, chief counsel for Beale, who is charged with the murder of two men at U. M. W. meeting, returned to Sydney yesterday from Halifax. Mr. Gunn made a motion before the full bench asking that permission be granted to receive bail for his client. The case will be argued on Friday.

GLOVER WILL CASE IN HANDS OF JURY.

Cambridge, Mass., May 2.—The contest of four of the five brothers of Clarence F. Glover, the murdered Wal-tham laundry man, over the will, which gave the bulk of his property to his widow and the fifth brother, was left for final decision in the hands of a jury of the supreme court tonight, Marshal Hammond instructing that body to return tomorrow in sealed form, any verdict which may be reached.

FUNERALS.

Mrs. Havihan S. Hall. The funeral of Mrs. Havihan Shaw Hall, wife of Stephen S. Hall, took place yesterday afternoon from St. John's (Stone) church, and was largely attended. Before the funeral services, which were conducted by Rev. G. A. Kurling, D. Arnold Fox, organist, played Chopin's funeral march. The choir was present, and during the services sang "Lead, Kindly Light," and "Abide With Me." As the funeral left the church, the organist played the Dead March in Saul. After the services the remains were conveyed to Fernhill, where interment took place.

HOW MR. OLIVER'S CASE WILL BE INVESTIGATED

Continued from page 1. Sir Wilfrid Laurier had ready a motion which appears on the official records of the House in the following terms: "That a special committee of five members be appointed to investigate the matter of privilege raised by the statement of Hon. Mr. Oliver, a member of this House on Tuesday, the second day of May, such committee to have power to send for persons and papers and to report from time to time. This motion confines the investigation to 'the statement of Mr. Oliver' not to the statement of the World. Notice how this dovetails into the way in which Mr. Oliver limits his statement to the land transaction.

Mr. Borden asked what the scope of the investigation would be. A moment's questioning brought from Sir Wilfrid Laurier the statement that it was to be whether Mr. Oliver had received $50,000 for changing the location of the land grant.

The Encyclopaedia Britannica, 11th Edition

Is a clearing house of modern thought, knowledge, and achievement, through which the layman can pass his doubts and difficulties, with the certain assurance that no reasonable demand for information that he may present will be dishonored.

The work has all the comprehensiveness of an ideal library, the quick accessibility as to contents of an ordinary dictionary, and (in the convenient India paper, flexible leather-bound format) the unprecedented quality in a work of reference of being as easily handled as a magazine. Its necessity as a resource is measured by the helplessness of even the most learned man alive in the face of the vast complex of things knowable, and its value in use by the thoroughness with which everything that can possibly interest a civilized people has been traversed and indexed by the experts who wrote it. If every other book in the world were destroyed it is not too much to say that, so far as essentials are concerned, it would be possible to reconstruct the human story from its pages; and as in the event of such an unthinkable catastrophe the Encyclopaedia Britannica (Eleventh Edition) would thus be the one work which civilization could least afford to lose, so in the case of the individual it is the best, in fact the only, remedy for the disabilities imposed by his enforced ignorance of all but the most insignificant fraction of the whole of recorded knowledge.

Of all kinds of loneliness, loneliness in a crowd is the most depressing, and of all kinds of ignorance, the ignorance of the modern man which is the outcome of his necessary intellectual isolation is the most humiliating.

The special torture of Tantalus was not merely that he was condemned to perpetual thirst, but that in the midst of an abundance of water he was unable to drink, and it is the similar misfortune of the man of to-day that between himself and the streams of knowledge springing up in every direction around him there is interposed a barrier which the very richness and variety of modern intellectual life only serve to render the more intolerable. Every intelligent person has an instinct amounting to a profound conviction that, while the special training and elaborate mental equipment of the expert are something peculiarly his own, his conception and viewpoint can be shared if only they are intelligently interpreted. What irritates and baffles him is the discovery that if he tries to translate this belief into practice, the information he seeks is usually so scattered in source, so diffuse in form and so technical in expression that even the resources of well-furnished bookshelves avail to help him very little. The more valuable the contents of a technical library, the less as a rule has it to offer to anyone outside of the limited circle to whom its volumes are addressed.

It is primarily as an instrument of record and research constructed by the leading specialists themselves for lay use that the new Encyclopaedia Britannica is offered by the press of the University of Cambridge as a complete solution of the problem of the man who is desirous of being of his age as well as in it.

In its pages 1,500 representative experts chosen solely on the ground of pre-eminence in their respective fields have co-operated to break down the intellectual isolation of the general reader by presenting him with an exhaustive account of human achievement to 1910 in which he will find what he seeks and understand what he finds. Vast as is the sum of human knowledge, it is finite, and it has been found possible to exhaust its essential contents within the compass of 27,000 quarto pages of 1,500 words each, and at the same time to preserve an encyclopaedic arrangement by which, with the further aid of an index volume containing 500,000 references, any isolated item of information is instantly accessible. And in this co-operative achievement of modern international scholarship nothing has been abated of the high standard observed by specialists writing for specialists. To the expert the book will prove fruitful of suggestion even in the field he knows so well, besides fulfilling every demand he can make on it in the vasty great region which lies beyond the limits of his special knowledge. In the effort to produce a work of universal reference suitable for all classes of users, no sacrifice has been permitted of the great tradition for exhaustive treatment with which for 140 years the name of the Encyclopaedia Britannica has always been associated. It is the organization and not the spirit of the work itself that has been changed.

As further extending its usefulness as an instrument of popular culture the editors of the 11th Edition consider that the innovation of India paper logically completes on the material side a refining process by which an aggregate of knowledge estimated to be twice as great as that contained in the 9th Edition has been brought within the covers of 28 volumes.

It is not altogether easy to realize that a thin, flexible volume, occupying one inch of shelf room as against almost three, not only contains 25 per cent. more reading matter than the bulky quarto of the Ninth Edition, but also excels it in durability. Indeed, in this respect, the substitution of India for ordinary paper is reminiscent of the change in structural work from stone to steel. While in every way the superiority of the latter material is incontestable, to an old-fashioned engineer accustomed to the massive masonry of years gone by it must always come a little hard to associate the slender lines of a modern bridge with the idea of increased permanence and added strength.
