

UNIVERSITY RELATION.

The University of British Columbia today offers the highest degree in Nursing that can be secured, on the fulfilment of certain conditions as hereinafter indicated. A few months ago the General Superintendent and Board of Directors submitted to the British Columbia University authorities a scheme by which the Training School could be connected more closely with the University. The proposal as made formed the basis for the establishment of a Department of Nursing in the University of British Columbia, under the Faculty of Science. The final arrangement as adopted, in substance is as follows:

That the University of British Columbia agrees to establish a Department of Nursing, with a degree to be granted on the fulfilment of certain conditions, namely:

- (a) Two years' Arts or preparatory course.
- (b) Completion of three years' training in a recognized Training School (required standard for the Training School to be laid down later).

With this arrangement, candidates desiring to take the degree or five years' course, will complete their two years in the University before going in to train. Those who do not wish to take the degree will go into the Hospital direct, taking up the three years' training and will get the Hospital diploma, but not the degree. Both Nurses, however, will secure the same practical training.

POST-GRADUATE WORK.

The Hospital offers post-graduate courses in the following: Operating Room Technique, Obstetrics, Pediatrics and Dietetics. Scholarships valued at $250.00 to $300.00 are granted to different Nurses of the graduating class to enable them to take up post-graduate work in other hospitals. During the last year three such scholarships were granted.
