A FINANCIAL WIZARD

THE SPECTACULAR CAREER OF HENRY MEIGGS.

He Was Worth Millions In Califor nia, Yet Left That State a Fugitive Debtor and Then Built Up a New Fortune In South America.

"No tale of the fortunes which have been built up by North Americans in the republics of Latin America," says Doug-lass White in Ainslee's, "would be comlass White in Ainslee's, "would be complete without reference to the career of Henry Meiggs. His operations in Chile and Peru form the most spectacular story of finance which South America has ever furnished, and beyond a doubt had he been Tranted but a few more years of life he would have died one of the richest men, if not the richest man, in the world. To him the amount of money involved in the receiving out no figure, and he dealt a transaction cut no figure, and he dealt in millions with less worry than ordinary operators handle thousands.

"Henry Meiggs learned the lesson of Henry Meiggs learned the lesson of finance in a school where large figures were common. As a young man he passed through the years when California was the world's El Dorado and gold was more plentiful in some sections than was the water with which to wash it. He rose to the crest of the golden wave, and his fortune was estimated then at several millions. The time of reaction caught him loaded with properties upon which he could not quickly realize ready coin, and with many others he sank before the buried under an avalanche of debt.
"In October, 1854, Meiggs lett San Francisco not only a ruined man, but a Investigation showed this to be none other than Henry Meigrs, the man who had fled from debt in California. Then Meigrs' creditors began to hear from him, and one by one the California debts were wiped out. Even a washerwoman to whom he owed a few dollars was sought out by his agents, who were instructed to not only the long standing laundry bill, but to add enough gold to place the poor woman forever beyond want. One lot of debts Meiggs declined to pay until by a readjustment the full amount of the claims might be passed to the original creditors. These were claims which had been purchased for a song by specula-tors when the first rumor of Meiggs' South American success reached the California coast. To the clamorous brokers he turned a deaf ear, but declared himself ready at any time to meet the full obligations, with interest, if he could pay the sum claimed into the hands of his original creditors. For a time the brokers held out, but as Meiggs was safe from attack they finally were obliged to rield, and the money for thousands of Meiggs' debts was thus forced by him into the possession of its rightful owners. "Meanwhile the South American for tune had grown. Meiggs cleared a full tune had grown. Meiggs cleared a full million from a contract for the building of Chile's first railroad between the port of Valparaiso and Santiago de Chile. "Next came the construction of Peru's original railway line between Molleado and Araguina, which doubled Meiggs." and Arequipa, which doubled Meiggs' fortune. Every contract was made directly with the government of the republic wherein the road was to be built. Scheme after scheme, each more gigantic than the other, was successfully carried out. Meiggs at one time offered to build a breakwater at the mouth of Valparaiso's harbor if the Chilean government would give him a 99 year lease of its venture have cost, but the principal har-bor of Chile would have been rendered safe for all time. The Chileans feared Meiggs' rapid strides to wealth and de-manded a large price for the rental of the sheltered side of the breakwater, even should the work be done without cost to the republic. Consequently the cost to the republic. Consequently the project failed, and today the wind swept bay is without protection.

"In 1870 the financial world was Meiggs' rapid strides to wealth and de amazed by the magnitude of a contract entered into between Meiggs and the entered into between Meiggs and the Peruvian government. This called for the construction of a complete Peruvian railway system, even to a line crossing the summit of the Andes. Meiggs was to deliver the lines ready for operation and receive the sum of $125,000,000 in gold, and the complete in the standard control of the sum of $125,000,000 in gold, and the standard control of the sum of $125,000,000 in gold, and the standard control of the sum of $125,000,000 in gold, and the standard control of the sum of $125,000,000 in gold, and the standard control of the sum of $125,000,000 in gold, and the control of the sum of $125,000,000 in gold, and the construction of the sum of $125,000,000 in gold, and the s payable in installments as the work pro-

"At first the money came promptly, then Peru was forced to borrow to meet the Meiggs contract, and finally, when European loans could not be effected, Meiggs accepted the obligations of The Peruvian government until he practically Peruvian government until he practically owned the republic. Even the assassination of his friend, Colonel Balta, then president of Peru, failed to interfere with the railway plans.

"Finally Peru could do no more, and Meiggs' own fortune was tied up in the building of the railways. So for lack of money the work was stopped. Negotiations for a further loan from Europe, with Meiggs' assistance, were almost tions for a further loan from Europe, with Meiggs' assistance, were almost consummated when, in 1877, death cut off the most remarkable career of any Yankee in South America. With his death the loan negotiations failed, and then followed Peru's unfortunate war with Chile. Until 1884 the Meiggs railway operations slumbered. In that year way operations slumbered. In that year when peace came to the two republics the firm of W. R. Grace & Co. took up the Meiggs contract.

"In spite of his success Meiggs nev revisited the state of California. His trials there seemed to have created in him an aversion for the place. Even a resolution passed by the California legislature asking him to return failed to influence him to visit the state.

"One of the peculiarities which characterized this brilliant operator was that he always worked alone. There never was a partner in his dealings, and he never sought advice. He looked into the future through no mind save his own, and when once his course was shaped he never changed it. Neither of the American continents will ever show another career exactly paralleling that of this daring operator.'

MAKING FIRE BY WOOD.

One Camper Who Tried This Ancleat Plan Without Success.

"Hanged if I believe anybody ever made a fire by rubbing two sticks together, all travelers' yarns to the contrary notwithstanding," declared an enthusiastic local sportsman the other day. "I spent a couple of weeks with a camping party last spring, and one morning I got separated from the other boys, and it was night before I found my way back to our shack. I am an inveterate smoker, and when I filled up my pipe after wandering around for an hour or two I was horrified to find that my match safe was empty. As soon as I made that discovery my desire for a smoke increased about 500 per cent. If I had had my gun along, I could have started a blaze without trouble, but unluckily I had set out to do some fishing and had no weapon but my hook and line. Naturally the first thing that occurred to me was flint and steel, but I couldn't find any flint, and then I happened to think of the old story shout making fire with two pieces. Of

then I happened to think of the old story about making fire with two pieces of "Well. I won't tire you with details, but "Well, I won't tire you with details, but if ever a man gave an experiment a conscientious trial I did on this occasion. I picked up chunks of half a dozen different kinds of wood, trimmed them down with my penknife and tried them all in various combinations, using one hard and one soft stick, exactly as the story books say the Indians do. But, although I rubbed until the pesky things were chafed nearly in two, I never succeeded in getting them even warm. At last I remembered reading somewhere about a scheme bered reading somewhere about a scheme of the natives of Java, who are said to lay a flat piece of wood on the ground and twiri a sniall rod, top fashion, on its and twirl a sniall rod, top fashion, on its surface, by means of a cord. I soon made one of the machines, cutting up my suspenders for the string. At the end of half an hour I was redhot and the apparatus was dead cold. But I had gone far enough to convince me that the man who wrote the story was a triple plated liar, and I yearned violently for his gore. I struck camp just about dusk, and the first thing I did was to grab a coal from the fire and put it on my pipe. Later on I discovered four matches in the lining of my vest. I won't repeat my remarks, but my vest. I won't repeat my remarks, but my friends asked me why I didn't talk that way in the woods. They say my language would have set fire to a piece of a Woman of Wit. I dare say there isn't a woman on earth who hasn't a theory on the subject of how to manage a husband, and I have never yet come across a man who was any the worse for a little scientific hanany the worse for a little scientific handling now and then. If I were in the florist business, I'd send a palm to a certain senator's daughter, who has set an example managing wives might follow with profit. She has a husband, this senator's daughter, who is disposed to be critical. Most of his friends are men of great wealth, who live extremely and association with them has made him omewhat hard to please in the matter of cooking. For some time the tendency has been growing on him. Scarcely a meal at his home table passed without criticism from him.

"What is this meant for?" he would ask after tasting an entree his wife had racked her brain to think up.
"What on earth is this?" he would say when dessert came on.

"Is this supposed to be a salad?" he would inquire sarcastically when the let-tuce was served. The wife stood it as long as she could. One evening he came home in a particularly captious humor. His wife was dressed in her most becoming gown and fairly bubbled over with wit. They went in to dinner. The some wit. They went in to dinner. The soup tureen was brought in. Tied to one handle was a card and on that card the in formation in a big round hand:

"This is soup."
Roast beef followed, with a placard

"This is roast beef." The potatoes were labeled, the gravy dish was placarded, the clives bore a card marked "Olives," the salad bowl carried a tag marked "Salad," and when the ice cream came in a card announcing "This is ice cream" came with it. wife talked of a thousand different things all through the meal, never once refer-ring by word or look to the labeled dishes. Neither then nor thereafter did she say a word about them, and never since that evening has the captious hus band ventured to inquire what anything set before him is.

Wanted a Blot.

Before Cecil Rhodes went to Kimber-ley he was walking near Paarl with Rud-yard Kipling on a hill whence a most beautiful view was to be obtained. The outlook, however, was slightly spoiled by three apple trees, and Rhodes decided that they must come down. So he rush ed to the nearest cottage and, finding the door locked, broke it in, found an old ax and began hacking the trees down. Kip-ling sat by in silence. At last the trees fell. Rhodes sat down to enjoy the rell. Rhodes sat down to enjoy the view. Kipling got up, picked up a piece of dirty rag that was lying on the ground. and tied it on a branch of one of the fall en trees. "What on earth did you do that for?" said Rhodes. "Now I can see the view," replied Kipling. "You must never have a scene too perfect. You must always have a blot, and that is my blot. If you get perfection, you cease to enjoy it."

To Make Haggis.

Haggis is made in various ways, all more or less elaborate. The simplest manner of preparing it is this: Boil the head, heart and liver of a sheep with one head, heart and liver of a sheep with one pound of bacon for an hour; then chop them, reason highly and aid sufficient raw oatment to make a thick mush. Boil for two hours in a bag and serve in the same, opening it and rolling it back to look as well as you can. This receptacle is less objectionable than that frequently seem in Soutand a sheep's stomach! seen in Scotland-a sheep's stomach!
