Footsteps of Angels.

By R. W. LONGFELLOW.

When the hours of Day are numbered,
And the voices of the Night
Wake the better soul, that slumbered,
To a holy, calm delight;

Ere the evening lamps are lighted,
And like phantoms grim and tall,
Shadows from the flint fire-light
Dance upon the parlor wall:

Then the forms of the departed
Enter at the open door;
The beloved, the true-hearted,
Come to visit me once more;

He, the young and strong, who cherished
Noble longings for the strife,
By the road-side fall and perished,
Weary with the march of life;

They, the holy ones and weakly,
Who the cross of suffering bore,
Folded their pale hands so meekly,
Spoke with us on earth no more!

And with them the Being Beautiful,
Who unto my youth was given,
More than all things else to love me,
And is now a saint in heaven

With a slow and noiseless footstep
Comes that messenger divine,
Takes the vacant chair beside me,
Lays her gentle hand in mine.

And she sits and gazes at me
With those deep and tender eyes,
Like the stars, so still and saint-like,
Looking downward from the skies.

Uttered not, yet comprehended,
Is the spirit's voiceless prayer,
Soft rebukes, in blessings ended,
Breathing from her lips of air.

O, thought of the departed lonely,
All my fears are laid aside,
If I but remember only
Such as these have lived and died!

THE LOST WILL.

Old Gerald Rushford was dead and buried, and all the dear five hundred friends were in a state of astonishment and consternation over his will, for it named his pet and protégé, Marian Gray, his sole heiress, while his nephew, Robert Rushford, was not even mentioned. "There is some strange mistake," Mr. Wilde, the lawyer, said. "There was a later will than this, drawn up after Mr. Robert came home, and leaving the bulk of the property to him. In this Miss Gray was generally remembered, too; but this one, which makes her heiress, was made while Mr. Rushford was ignorant that his nephew had escaped. I supposed that this had long since been destroyed."

"What caused him to suppose so?" was Robert Rushford's very natural question; to which the lawyer replied that his client had told him—on the occasion of his drawing up the second will—that it was his intention to put the first one in the fire.

"And I thought he had done so. I never doubted it. It seems, however, that we have got hold of the wrong document; the other is in existence somewhere. We will have a thorough search for it."

"And until you find it, or if you fail to find it, this one stands," said Robert Rushford, quietly, stating a fact which the lawyer was forced to admit.

Meantime the heiress by the first will, and legatee by the second, had not quiet and still. She listened, with her eyes cast down, but spoke no word.

While her friends and acquaintances discussed her not always quite inaudibly—what a very awkward and peculiar position for Miss Gray! What an opportunity—if the second will did not turn up—to show her magnanimity and sense of honor, by making over the fortune to young Rushford! Doubtless, in such case, he would be most generous to her, and really, you know, to a girl of Miss Gray's birth and former position, a few thousands would be a fortune. "What was her position? A daughter of old Rushford's housekeeper, my dear, brought up for a governess, or something—came on a visit to her mother while the old man was sick, and nursed him so tenderly and skillfully that he could not be persuaded to part with her again. She had been as a daughter in the house ever since, and if young Rushford had never turned up—if he had really been lost at sea, as was so long supposed—why, you know, rich old men are eccentric, and there would have been nothing very astonishing in his making her his heiress after all. But now it would be terrible. Uter words to the young man's prospects in life. Of course his engagement with Florence Huntley would be broken off. Florence is not fit for a poor man's wife—a lovely creature—and he so infatuated, my dear! It will break his heart to lose her!"

And so, on the stream of gossip flowed—some portions of it finding its way into Marian's ears—until the searching party returned, and announced that, as yet, they had not yet found the second will.

"There was a marked increase of respect towards Miss Gray after this intelligence, and some would have congratulated her, but she checked them."

"It is too early yet," she said, with a sad smile.

But the gossips agreed that her chances were favorable.

"And if she really is the heiress, my dear, why, of course, it's dreadful for the young man—terrible—but still—"

Public opinion was disposed to be kind to the heiress in any case.

"She is not over-eager—she bears her honors meekly—shouldn't wonder if she turns the fortune over to the nephew after all!" was the comment of many after they left the house and went their several ways.

They would have judged differently if they could have seen her that night, looked securely in her own room, the blinds and shutters closed, no eyes save those of Heaven upon her. She unfashioned her dress and drew a sealed and folded parchment from her bosom—it was the missing will.

She gazed upon it long and earnestly.

"Miserable document!" she whispered. "If I should give you up to him now what ruin you would work! Yes, you would rob me of all I prize, and place it in the keeping of another! And I should give up Miss Huntley for being poor! What is her love worth, then? And is she so dear to him that it will break his heart to lose her—as it would mine to lose the one whom I love? Whom I love? Whom I love? She went on in the same low whisper, clasping her hands in a burst of anguish.

"Whom I love, but who has no thought for me! Only for her—and my will action part them? Is it a sin? Will he ever, ever forgive me? Is it a sin to part true lovers, who are true? For what? For—poor if they are, poverty will not part them!"

When she lay down to sleep that night the lost will lay under her pillow, and a sealed letter beside it, addressed to Robert Rushford; Marian kissed that name before she went to sleep.

"He will forgive me when he reads this letter," she thought. "I do but obey the dead."

And all the next day the will lay warm in her bosom, while Robert and Mr. Wilde searched carefully and wearily through all the household papers, but without success. It was hard to see his disappointed face, and feel that she could make all well so easily.

"I must obey the dead," she told herself. "I must obey the dead!"

At last they gave up all hope of the lost will, and resigned themselves to what seemed a hard fate, and Miss Gray was declared Gerald Rushford's lawful heiress.

Mr. Wilde made no secret of his disgust.

"There might be some arrangement made by which you could fulfill the wishes of the dead," Miss Gray said. "I judge you are scarcely one to play the cuckoo by pushing the true bird out of the nest in order to occupy it yourself. I need remember the terms of the second will."

"To be sure," she answered, quietly. "The will may be found yet, sir. Excuse me if I hesitate to tax your memory while that chance remains. Believe me, my most earnest wish and endeavor is to obey the dead."

"He did not understand," she said to Robert, "but somehow I fancy she'll give you your money after all; yes, I do believe it."

"S. D. I," replied Robert. "Women are mercenary. See how quickly Florence Huntley has thrown me over. It was worth while to let the fortune to find her out. Fancy marrying a girl in the belief that she really loved you, and afterwards discovering that she only wanted your purse. That would have been my fate if I'd got the fortune. I was hard hit, too, while I thought her a woman with a loving heart, but I shall survive my disappointment. If I thought there was any danger of Miss Gray's indulging in any Quixotic acts of renunciation, I should take measures to prevent it; but you need not mind that kind of thing among women, believe me."

And Mr. Wilde began to think the same as time went on. For six months Marian went quietly on her way, obeying—while the lawyer accused her of ignoring the wishes of the dead.

Robert was an apt writer and had obtained employment on the press where he made a living. Marian rolled by him in his uncle's carriage to the street. It seemed as if the disgraced cuckoo had pushed the true bird out of the nest, after all.

"Mercenary! mercenary to the core!" was Robert's reflection, as he lifted his hat to his uncle's heiress as she rode by, and admired in spite of himself, her sweet, pale face.

"Looks as if there might be a heart and a soul behind those soft, dark eyes—looks like a woman to love and be loved, but they're all alike—mercenary to the very core!"

And he was sensible of a feeling of disappointment over Marian.

"She should be a higher, truer, better type of woman than Florence was, if appearances go for anything at all. She should have gone for nothing to give up to me the fortune. I wouldn't have accepted the sacrifice; but I could have admired and respected her for being ready to make it. But they're all alike."

Reaching his lodgings he found Mr. Wilde waiting for him in a tremendous state of excitement, and holding an open letter in his hand.

"Look here! Just received this, Marian!"

"Dear Sir: Be good enough to call upon me at 7 o'clock p.m. and bring Mr. Rushford with you. The will is found. I have since pleasure in giving the true heir in possession of his own estate. Very respectfully, MARIAN GRAY."

"Where was it found? Where was it found?" cried Mr. Wilde, as Marian gave the document into his hands. "Where on earth was it found my dear?"

"It was never lost," said Marian, quietly.

And then she told them all.

"Old Mr. Rushford knew of his nephew's love for Mr. Huntley, and did not approve of it. Yet he feared that to oppose it would only offend the family. He had great confidence in me, gentlemen, and revealed to me his plans. I knew the contents of both the wills. During his last illness he gave the true one into my care, with instructions to conceal it six months. 'By that time my nephew will be thought of as a poor man,' said he, 'and the girl who fools him with a pretense of love will show herself in her true colors.' This letter, Mr. Rushford, will confirm my words; and if, as he added, 'timidly,' 'If I have sinned in parting you from your love, O pardon me! Perhaps I may yet be won, now you are rich again, and I—I but obeyed the wishes of the dead.'"

"And in so doing earned my last gratitude," cried Robert, warmly. "Florence is not worth winning. I can imagine no more miserable life than that which must fall to the lot of her husband. And it is worth more than the fortune to know that in you I find a true woman at last, whose heart and mind do not belie her face, but one is as lovely as the other."

He stopped short, for Mr. Wilde's hand was on his arm.

"Read your letter first," said that gentleman, coolly, "and then we'll read the will."

Robert obeyed him.

"The letter confirms Marian's statement," said he, "and contains the expression of a wish. Do you know what that wish is?" he asked her.

"No," she answered, in surprise; "I do not."

"But you would advise me to endeavor to comply with it, of course—you who fulfilled his wishes so religiously? And this wish is also my own. Yes, my most earnest desire," Marian laughed sweetly.

"I should be easy to comply with then," she said.

"It will be to me, but it depends upon another—upon you!"

"Upon me?"

"Yes, dearest Marian, upon you. Mr. Wilde here is going to inform me, I know, that this new will gives the fortune to me. I can receive it only upon one condition. Can you guess what it is?"

Her eyes fell beneath his—the conscious crimson dyed her fair, soft cheeks.

"I will not guess," she whispered.

"You shall tell me."

"But you'll tell me little flustering hand and raised it to his lips.

"If I take fortune from this precious hand, give me the hand as well," he said. "Darling Marian, I love you! I have loved you longer than I know. Be my sweet wife!"

"She shrunk back, blushing, trembling."

"Is it so poor?"

"No, no; rich, rather—rich in goodness, wisdom, beauty, love—and I adore you! Nay, you will consent to be my wife, I know. You must obey the wishes of the dead, you know. Must she not, Mr. Wilde?" he asked, with sudden recollection—but that discreet gentleman had stolen from the room.

"I will obey the wishes of my own heart, first," said Marian.

"Dear Robert, can it be that you really love me?"

"With my whole heart! And you, Marian?"

"Oh, I have loved you long," she whispered, on his breast.

"They were married, and the finding of the long-lost will made little difference, since they shared the fortune together."

WHOLESALE COUGH AND CONSUMPTION

FROM JONAS LOFF, OF KRYSTON, N. J.

"This certifies that I was for many years afflicted with a disease of the lungs, until I came to know that it was with difficulty I could walk. My cough during this time was very severe, causing me frequently to raise great quantities of phlegm, and at night to cough so much that I could not sleep. After using various remedies to no purpose, I was advised to try VIAL'S BALNEUM LUNG, and after using it for a few days, using the first bottle I was entirely restored to perfect health and strength. I would also mention that this Balsam cured a little girl of mine of a severe attack of whooping cough, when her life was given over by the physician, and all other remedies had failed."

50 cents and $1 a bottle. Sold by all druggists.

—Mr. Alexander Longfellow, a nephew of the poet, obtained the highest honors among the American architects who competed at the school of Fine Arts, Paris.

—Ada Trevanion, daughter of Byron's lady, has just died in England, aged 52. She had written a book of poems. By her country Augustus were addressed to her mother. It was to her he said: "My sister! my sweet sister! if a name Daughter and pure were, it should be thine."

One of the most successful and benign combinations ever effected is that of the six medicinal oils of which a balsam of Eucalypti is composed. This balsam is not only a powerful remedy, but the efficacy of the highest order, but inasmuch as it contains no alcohol, its influence is not weakened by evaporation. It is the case with a great many oils of doubtful efficacy, which have an alcoholic basis.

It is an incomparable specific for affections of the throat and lungs, remedies chronic hoarseness and feebleness of the voice, and is equally useful for the treatment of the most obstinate and dangerous cases of consumption, pleurisy, and other diseases which can be effected by outward treatment, yielding its operation with great promptness and certainty, thus to the relief of any remedy, when used inwardly, it is equally efficacious.

Dysentery, Ulcer troubles, piles, hemorrhoids, are among the complications which it eradicates.

For aches, sores, burns, frost-bite, and contusions, it is immeasurably the best remedy in use.

All medicine dealers sell it.

—One of the most remarkable stories of the difficulties of Bible translation is mentioned by Mr. A. B. Burrell in the Academy. In one of the Dutch islands about Java, there were unknown until a missionary translated "Lamb of God" by "Son of the Dutch God of God."

—Ayer's Pills contain no croton oil, calomel or mineral. They are compounded of pure vegetable extracts, which have positive virtues and always cure, where cures are possible.

—Mr. Mulhally, who is known as a statistician, has devised a plan for adjusting the difficulty between England and Ireland. He would build a break-water across from the coast of Ireland to the mainland and a similar one at the north. Then he would pump the water out between. He thinks the valley would be a great summer resort, and the work would be done before the end of the next century. We will wait and see.

—D. Sullivan, Malcom Ontario, writes: "I have been selling Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil for some years, and have no hesitation in saying that it has given me great satisfaction. It cures all the ailments I have ever sold. I consider it the only patent medicine that cures more than it is recommended to cure."

—It being thought that ministers, as a rule, were not doing their duty, a plan for performing any manual labor, a man in a Forest City, Iowa, concluded to try them. He obtained in the papers that he would give $1 an hour to any citizen who would come and saw wood for him. Nearly all the preachers in the city accepted the plan, and he saw them every day, for several hours a day. They think they can stand it as long as the man and the wood pile hold out.

CONQUERING WITH CONSUMPTION.

Some people, troubled with coughs, seem absolutely to conquer with consumption—encouraging it by a total neglect of medicine, and again attempting to stave it off with ill-chosen cough remedies. How much wiser to eradicate it at the outset by using NORTON & LYMAN'S Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil and Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda. Promptly and the use of this medicine cannot too strongly urged upon those consumptively afflicted, in a climate so severe during the winter as our own. The public generally as well as the medical fraternity, is acquainted with the value, as a remedy for lung and throat troubles, of the purified oil of the Cod's liver. United with this in existence, namely, lime and soda hypophosphites, of which the chief component, phosphorus, is an incomparable restorer of the blood and invigorator of the system. Nothing builds up a broken-down system and enables it to resist the invasions of pulmonary disease like this leading preparation. Coughs, colds, asthma, bronchitis, soreness and weakness of the chest are among the bodily troubles which it overcomes, and in scrofulous it has been used with great success as a remedy. Sold by all druggists, at 50 cents and $1.00 per bottle. Prepared only by NORTON & LYMAN, Toronto, Canada.

Whoooping Cough and Consumption

FROM JONAS LOFF, OF KRYSTON, N. J.

"This certifies that I was for many years afflicted with a disease of the lungs, until I came to know that it was with difficulty I could walk. My cough during this time was very severe, causing me frequently to raise great quantities of phlegm, and at night to cough so much that I could not sleep. After using various remedies to no purpose, I was advised to try VIAL'S BALNEUM LUNG, and after using it for a few days, using the first bottle I was entirely restored to perfect health and strength. I would also mention that this Balsam cured a little girl of mine of a severe attack of whooping cough, when her life was given over by the physician, and all other remedies had failed."

50 cents and $1 a bottle. Sold by all druggists.

—Mr. Alexander Longfellow, a nephew of the poet, obtained the highest honors among the American architects who competed at the school of Fine Arts, Paris.

—Ada Trevanion, daughter of Byron's lady, has just died in England, aged 52. She had written a book of poems. By her country Augustus were addressed to her mother. It was to her he said: "My sister! my sweet sister! if a name Daughter and pure were, it should be thine."

One of the most successful and benign combinations ever effected is that of the six medicinal oils of which a balsam of Eucalypti is composed. This balsam is not only a powerful remedy, but the efficacy of the highest order, but inasmuch as it contains no alcohol, its influence is not weakened by evaporation. It is the case with a great many oils of doubtful efficacy, which have an alcoholic basis.

It is an incomparable specific for affections of the throat and lungs, remedies chronic hoarseness and feebleness of the voice, and is equally useful for the treatment of the most obstinate and dangerous cases of consumption, pleurisy, and other diseases which can be effected by outward treatment, yielding its operation with great promptness and certainty, thus to the relief of any remedy, when used inwardly, it is equally efficacious.

Dysentery, Ulcer troubles, piles, hemorrhoids, are among the complications which it eradicates.

For aches, sores, burns, frost-bite, and contusions, it is immeasurably the best remedy in use.

All medicine dealers sell it.
