"Well, Jimmie," said the visitor, "I understand you have a new baby here."

"Yes," said Jimmie. "He got here last Tuesday night."

"Whom does he look like, your father or your mother?" asked the visitor.

"We don't know yet," said Jimmie. "He seems kind of undecided yet."

"They tell me he has your father's nose," said the visitor.

"Yes," said Jimmie. "He has paunt's nose, and ma's mouth, and Aunt Sarah's ears, and between you and me I'm for givin' him grandpa's teeth."

"He ain't got any of his own, and grandpa's got two sets. What I'm afraid of is that if they don't give 'em to him he'll get mine, and I need 'em in my business."—London Tit-Bits.

UNVEILED AT BURLINGTON.

Important Masonic Ceremony In That Place Yesterday.

Monument to Capt Kerr Erected by Brethren.

Splendid Address by the Grand Master, A. T. Freed.

One of the most important Masonic events of the year was held at Burlington yesterday, the unveiling of the monument to the late Capt. Kerr, a past-master of The Barton Lodge, No. 6, this city.

About 250 of the brethren in regalia walked to St. Luke's Church, Burlington, headed by a contingent of Knights Templars, who were followed by Indian Commissioners, Bro. Gordon Smith and six stalwart representatives of the Six Nations Indians. The 13th Regiment was represented by Col. W. E. Moore and Major Ross; the 91st by Capt. Stewart and Lieut. Stevens; the Battery by Lieut. Taylor and Dr. O'Reilly. The 20th Halton, the 37th Haldimand Rifles were also represented. The "Old Barton Lodge" has reason to feel gratified at the splendid success of this fine historical event. The lodge at Burlington, which had its divine service also yesterday, was crowded out by the great attendance. The services were conducted by the Rev. Mr. Harvey, at the church, which was beautifully decorated, and the sermon was one directed to Masons especially, by Bro. Rev. Canon Abbott.

The choir was in full force and the hymn singing by the Brethren was an inspiration. At the special request of the Master and D. of C., of Burlington Lodge, Wor. Bro. John Hoodless took charge of the ceremonies.

GRAND MASTER'S ADDRESS.

Grand Master A. T. Freed's address was listened to with the closest attention. It was a masterpiece and will be read with general interest. He said: "At our own time the remains of William Johnson Kerr, of his wife and his children. They have rested peacefully here for many years, but no memorial stone has till now been erected to tell the passer-by whose graves these are, nor what they did who occupy them."

Recently the members of the Barton Lodge, No. 6, of Freemasons, decided to mark the spot, because Captain Kerr was a member and past master of the lodge, and because he rendered important service, not only to Masonry but to his King and his country.

William Johnson Kerr was a relative of Sir John Johnson, who took a very prominent part on the royal side in the war of the American revolution. He married a sister of Joseph Brant, and was, by lineage and by marriage, drawn to the defence of his country in her hour of danger. At the breaking out of the war of 1812 he was given command of the warriors of the Six Nations Indians, and with them he participated in many of the conflicts of that war down to the battle of Chippewa. In that battle he was taken prisoner, and remained in captivity till the end of the war.

"The Barton Lodge of Freemasons was formed in 1795. In 1812, on the breaking out of the war, many of its members offered their services to their country, and owing to their absence during the unsettled condition of the country, the meetings of the lodge were interrupted. When the war was over conditions had changed. The grand body from which the lodge had received its warrant had formed a union with the original grand lodge of England, and it was uncertain whether or not the body had a legal existence as a Masonic lodge. The brethren met; they elected officers; they exercised all the powers of a Masonic lodge, except that they refrained from making Masons. They endeavored to get a new warrant from the grand lodge of England, but there was delay and seeming neglect on the part of grand lodge officers. In this emergency Worshipful Brother Kerr took up the matter with his accustomed energy and perseverance, with the result that, in 1844, the new warrant was issued, and the Barton Lodge was numbered 733 on the grand registry of England.

"But while the members of the Barton Lodge are deeply interested in the service of Captain Kerr to their lodge, Canadians generally are more deeply interested in his military service, and particularly with the conflict at Beaver Dam, at which he commanded the Indians who alone fought the battle and won the victory of DeCew's. "In 1821 the United States declared war against Great Britain. Undoubtedly the republic had some cause for complaint; but the real object of the war, openly avowed in the press, on the platform, and in Congress, was the conquest of Canada. Great Britain was engaged in a death struggle with Napoleon, and it was believed that she would be quite unable to defend her American possessions against the million men, raised by the republic, and hurled against the thin and scattered population of these Provinces. But the few regular troops in Canada acquitted themselves nobly; the men of Canada sprang to arms in defence of their homes and their liberties; and the Indians gallantly marched to the aid of their white brethren. At Mackinac, at Detroit, at Queenston, at Chateaugay, at Lacolle, at Stoney Creek, at Beaver Dam, and Lundy's Lane, and on many another hard-fought field, the invaders were hurled back, and when, at the intercession of the Emperor of Russia, Great Britain granted peace to the republic, there was not a soldier of the United States in Canada, save those who languished in its prisons or slumbered beneath its sod. The armies of the republic were baffled and beaten back, its treasury was bankrupt, and its national flag had ceased to wave on the ocean.

"Among the first to take up arms was William Johnson Kerr. He took command of the Indians of the Six Nations, and was engaged in nearly all the battles along the Niagara frontier. His chief exploit, however, was the defeat of Col. Boerstler at Beaver Dam, which led to the surrender of that officer and his whole command.

"On the 23rd of June, 1813, Lieut. Fitzgibbon, with fifty regular troops, was stationed at DeCew's house, near the spot at present occupied by the power house of the Cataract Power Company. Mayor DeHaren was at St. Catharines, with several hundred men; Col. Bishop was at or near Jordan, and General Vincent was in command of the district, with headquarters at Hamilton, then known as "The Head of the Lake." Captain Kerr and his force of Indians was at the Beaver Dam, about two miles east of the position of Lieut. Fitzgibbon. United States troops, in strong force, occupied the whole of the Niagara frontier, their headquarters being the town of Newark, now Niagara-on-the-Lake. This army was too strong to be openly assailed by the meager forces of Gen. Vincent; but detached parties watched the enemy's line, cut off marauding parties and gave him such annoyance that it was resolved to attempt reprisals. One of these was to be the capture or destruction of Lieut. Fitzgibbon's command at DeCew's. On the evening of June 23, Boerstler was ordered to take command of an expeditionary force consisting of the 14th regular infantry, with detachments from other infantry regiments, a squadron of cavalry, two field guns, and the company of New York militia, the whole numbering between 700 and 800 men. It was intended that the movement should be absolutely secret and the attack a complete surprise. This intention was frustrated through the heroism of Mrs. Laura Secord, who accidentally learned of the expedition, and who successfully made her way through the lines of the enemy, past bands of Indians, and through lonely woods, to apprise Lieut. Fitzgibbon of his danger. The story of Laura Secord has been so well told by Mrs. Curzon, by William Kirby, and by other writers, that it would not be necessary to repeat it here, even were the time to do so at my disposal.

"The expeditionary force under Col. Boerstler left Niagara toward evening on the 23rd of June, bivouacked at Queenston that night, and started for its objective point early in the morning of the 24th. When it had arrived within about two miles of DeCew's, it was assailed by the Indians, under Capt. Kerr. This force was composed of 203 warriors of the Six Nations, 180 Caughnawagas, and nearly 100 others. Capt. Kerr was in command of the whole force, with John Brant as his lieutenant. The Caughnawagas were under command of Capt. Ducharme, a gallant French-Canadian, who acted most admirably throughout the engagement. One-half of the Indians attacked the enemy in front, while the other half circled round to the rear, so that the United States troops faced both ways and fought in two directions. The infantry fired at random into the woods, whence the shots of the Indians came or where their war-whoop was heard; the dragoons dashed into the thick brush, only to be driven back by the withering fire; the artillery thundered among the trees, doing little or no execution, the Indians being invisible. The tactics of the Indians were very simple. They would make a desperate attack upon one quarter of the enemy's position; then, withdrawing, would quickly circle round through the woods, and as desperately attack from another quarter. Thus

HAMILTON GAS LIGHT COMPANY

Col. Boerstler was led to believe that their numbers were very great. The fight lasted about three hours. Gradually the enemy had been forced back till he occupied a hollow, with a swamp in his rear, and the Indians were pressing upon him from all other sides. The commanding officer and a number of his captains had been wounded, about 100 men were dead or wounded, the artillery ammunition was nearly spent, and the troops were reduced to a state of terror, when Col. Boerstler raised a flag of truce.

"At this moment Lieut. Fitzgibbon appeared upon the scene with his company of regulars, and making a quick and accurate survey of the situation, sent an officer to demand the surrender of the enemy. After some parleying, the demand was complied with, and the whole of the enemy's force surrendered, except a few who had skulked off through the woods and escaped.

"Too much praise cannot be given to Lieut. Fitzgibbon for hisadroitness in assessing the numbers of the men under his command and securing the unconditional surrender of a greatly superior force; but it must not be forgotten that the whole of the fighting was done by Capt. Kerr's Indians, and that the battle was over when Lieut. Fitzgibbon appeared upon the scene.

"The fight at Beaver Dam had an important bearing upon the result of the war, and materially contributed to the final victory. To Captain Kerr and his brave Indians must be given due meed of praise. His name should be kept in remembrance by all Canadian Masons who love their craft and by all sons of Canada who love their country.

"The thunder of the guns has died away, and the hatreds and jealousies of the last century are silenced with it. The citizen of the United States passes with indifference over fields where his ancestors strove to conquer Canada, and the blue waves of Ontario carry only the freightage of commerce and the luxurious tourist where then it carried hostile navies. From the heights near the Beaver Dam one may look down upon smiling meadows and fruitful vineyards, with fields that promise corn. Near the scene of the conflict which I have spoken the falling waters generate power which, transmitted to distant towns and cities, gives light to the people and turns the wheels of busy industry. The old order of things, giving place to new, among the notable patriots of those days was William Johnson Kerr. His patriotism and loyalty incited him to lofty deeds, and his victory of Beaver Dam was material to the success of the cause for which he staked his life, and by which we hold the heritage of this great Dominion.
