

The Peel's Corner.

"Our Last Fitting."

Life's lease is short, John,
And that's the man's own fact,
The fittest day we'll find,
Least sorrow come at last.
A treasure we'll lay up, John,
Whar ne'er a warnin's g'ien, John,
A home without a war.
Come when the fittin' may, John,
We'll sit down for a beer,
And look up eyes for grace, John,
To bring up peace and rest.
We'll hear the voice of love, John,
The keep the narrow way,
And watch with jealous eye, John,
Our last—our fittin' day.
Ye ken we're fittin' day, John,
And sit for a beer,
To get our bairnies, sax, John,
And sticks a' neat an' clean.
But, oh, it mak's me wae, John,
(My only pride and stay)
Tae think that we must part, John,
When comes the fittin' day.
Through all our cares and toil, John,
We're helpin' an' aither,
And e'en when at the wairst, John,
We closer drew together.
Our bonnie bairnies, four, John,
Noo clad in "white array,"
We'll meet them, if we has faith, John,
When comes the fittin' day.
We've warin's had, fu' o'ft, John,
That filled our hearts wi' wae,
To tell us baith the truth, John,
We're creepin' down the brae.
A' these were wisel' sent, John—
Sure takin' o' decay,
That whisper'd aye to us, John,
Ere comes the fittin' day.

Once upon a Time.

How quiet was the farm that afternoon! Everything nodded and dozed in the sun or rested in the shade. The sun streamed down on meadow and field! The corn blades drooped and wilted. In the old field I could see the men in the wheat, their arms away in perfect rhythm with the swinging cradles. And how like silver the blades flashed as they turned! The bees buzzed and hummed lazily about the old fashioned "cypress" under the sitting room windows. We always called it "cypress," you know, because that wasn't the name of it, and they buzzed in vagrant fashion up and down the long rows of flowers that lined the path to the front gate. The morning glories had closed their bright eyes of blue and pink, but a forest of four-o'clocks were getting ready to wake up; the hollyhocks stood up like blossoming bean-poles. I always used to think that Aron's rod, when it "brought forth buds and bloomed blossoms," looked like a hollyhock; it pined in almonds, but it looked like a hollyhock, I know. The breath of the old fashioned pinks—no, dear, they were not carnations; we had no carnations then; they were just pinks—came sweetly on the air; and the frowzy bush of "old man" at the corner, looked old and wilted indeed; in the blazing heat a tall group of sunflowers stood up like a cluster of hospitable umbrellas; the big bunch of ribbon grass looked as sea-sawable as a striped summer silk, with the larkspurs drooping over it on one side, and on the other a group of "ruffled robins" standing up, cherry and blue as the skies. As though it was not sensibly warm enough to night as well as feeling, a colony of peepies stood blazing away above their pale leaves, while the coxcomb and Prince of Wales feather, added an unnecessary touch of warmth to the party. And here, there, anywhere—and trying to get somewhere else—the "Bouncing Bets" swarmed all over the garden, crept through the garden fence, and ran right along in the corners and right by the dusty roadside, among the disreputable dog-fennel and plebeian rayweed, clear down to where the big slouch crowd the road. I lay under the big Morrello cherry tree by the new well—the one near the house, you remember, seventy-eight feet deep, and yielded the coldest, clearest water in America—and lazily watched a few straggling fleecy clouds sailing aimlessly across the blue sky, as though they had lost their reckoning, and were waiting to be picked up and set right. I could hear the old clock tick solemnly away in the sitting room. It chimed a little on its way around the hall, and always ticked loudest on the left hand swing of the pendulum; and I had a starting way of going off at unexpected times in a funny sort of noise that sounded like a cough or chuckle, whichever would scare you most. The girls had gone to town. Grandma sat in the open sitting room door sewing, and I could hear the cool click of her long work-bench at the end of the kitchen, making a new single-tree to the right wagon. They could not see each other. I doubt if they heard, or at any rate observed each other's voices but I could very plainly see and hear each one, and I forgot my book, listening to them, and trying to guess their thoughts from their disjointed, changing, abrupt fragments of song. And the occasional utter of leaves stirred by a wandering breath of wind, the shadows dimpling to second growth of red clover, the raying note of a restless bird, the long, lustrous road, stretching far away past the woods to the "high prairie," the flash of butterfly's wings—how all harmonized with the broken songs that fell almost unconsciously at times from the old lips, like "the singers were over with the sadness of the house," while the whole with it at rest, and in a quiet, they break into singing.—(Robert J. Burdette)

Restitution After Many Years.

A commercial traveler told a good story a few days since: He said that a prominent merchant whose ways were at times "quite peculiar," and who resided not a thousand miles from the "City of Salt," walked into the carpet-room of his extensive store one day and found one of his clerks exhibiting some intricate carpets to an aged country couple who had strayed into the store. The merchant looked sharp at the old people for a moment, and then said to the clerk "Show them some better carpets—some of our best Brussels." As the clerk began to throw down roll after roll, the woman stopped him and said: "We can't afford them kind of carpets and we won't have 'em." "Hold on, auntie," replied the merchant. "Now which one of these would you like best? To which the old lady replied: 'I tell you I can't afford 'em—but this one is just lovely.' "What is the size of your room?" asked the merchant. In answer to this the old man produced from a capacious pocket an old envelope upon which were the figures giving the dimensions of the room and handed it to the merchant. After glancing at it he gave it to his clerk, with instructions to have the particular carpet which had pleased the old lady so much made up at once, in time for the train upon which the old people were to leave town that afternoon, at the same time telling them that it should not cost them a cent. Seeing the blank look of astonishment which overcame their faces, the merchant asked: "Ain't your name so and so?" "Yes," they replied. "Didn't you keep a tavern at such a time and at such a place?" To which they replied in the affirmative. "And didn't you have a boy at one time named—?" "Yes," said the merchant, "I am that boy, and when I tended bar for you I stole money enough from you to carpet your whole house. Take the carpet and say nothing more about it." They took the carpet, and have often told the story of the way in which it was obtained.—[Huron Journal.]

A Touching Story.

The following touching narrative from the Chicago Herald should be enough to make every man convert to the blue-ribbon order: "No, I won't drink with you today, boys," said a drummer to several companions as they settled down in a smoking car and passed the bottle. "The fact is, boys, I have quit drinking. 'I've sworn off.' 'What's the matter with you, old boy?' sang out one. 'If you've quit drinking, something's up.' 'What is it?' 'Well, boys, I'll tell you. Yesterday I was in Chicago. Down on South Clark street a customer of mine keeps a pawn-shop in connection with his other business. I called on him, and while I was there a young man of not more than 25, wearing threadbare clothes, and looking as hard as if he hadn't seen a sober day for a month, came in with a little package in his hand. He unwrapped it and handed the article to the pawnbroker, saying, 'Give me ten cents.' And, boys, what do you suppose it was? A pair of baby shoes; little things with the bottoms only a trifle soiled, as if they had been worn only once or twice. 'Where did you get these?' asked the pawnbroker. 'Got 'em at home,' replied the man, who had an intelligent face and the manner of a gentleman, despite his sad condition. 'My wife bought them for our baby. Give me ten cents for 'em—I want a drink.' 'You had better take the shoes back to your wife; the baby will need them,' said the pawnbroker. 'No, she won't, because she's dead. She's lying at home now—died last night.' As he said this the poor fellow broke down, bowed his head on the floor and cried like a child. Boys, said the drummer 'you may laugh if you please; but I—I have a baby at home, and I swear I'll never drink another drop.'"

TWINS.—We clip the following from the Pilot-Mound Signal, which alludes to Theo. Greenway, a former resident of this county: "Let the Manitoba Government now tremble, for the opposition that they little dream of. Our M.P.P., the leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, is jubilant although he cannot explain it, but somehow he feels younger, can step higher, longer, faster; the birds sing sweeter; the grass looks greener; the sky bluer; and his faith stronger, in the fertility and great future in store for this country than in any other previous period of his existence, and his chief reason is that his hope is in boys. May their brilliant future be the glory of their distinguished father, and their star shine with the effulgence of a Romulus and Remus of yore."

London, July 17.—This week's Truth contains a partially laudatory article on Dwight L. Moody, the famous evangelist, in which his career from the time when he was a clerk in a Chicago furniture establishment up to the present is given. In summing up Mr. Moody's qualities and attainments, the writer says that he has displayed a prodigious amount of shrewdness and a degree of common sense almost amounting to genius. The article concludes with the declaration that, "If you combine the entire bench of Bishops with the whole Wesleyan conference, and then throw in Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters, the entire body of theologians and pulpiteres would be found to possess between them less practical wisdom than this plain, unlettered American preacher."
