General Hamilton, Commander in Chief of the Mediterranean, and Inspector General of the Overseas forces of the Empire, has been invited by the Hon. Sam Hughes to make a Canadian tour, for the purpose of military inspection after his Mediterranean command ends in May next. The General in the course of an address before the Birmingham Institute, demanded the military training of all boys. He said that enthusiasts enter boys into the corps, by using the panoply of war as the bait, intending all the time to turn them into plaster saints. He said that let us look things fairly and squarely in the face, and press for compulsory cadet training in all schools, public and private. Let us concentrate on the mission in the estimate of a sum of £380,000 ($1,900,- 000) wherewith to begin next spring the military training of 250,000 boys between the ages of twelve and fourteen.

The Lords

of the Road.

Editor Evening Telegram.

Dear Mr. Editor:—In the latest and particular tangle in which Mr. Collishaw's motor figures, his straightforward account in the News shows that the fault was not on his side. But when he generalises on the grievances of motorists he is apt to find few outside themselves who agree with him.

The grievances are altogether on the other side and the courts cannot be too strict with these Lords of the Road who run about as if wealth, incarnated in mechanical energy and in speed, is above the law. Of course, of course it is not the motor that is dangerous. It is the peevishness of the reckless horse and cart, the child that obstruct it.

The roads are for the motorist and we petty men on foot must creep about by paths as best we can, consent if we can find a retreat where we are neither smothered with petrol-laden dust nor awakened at midnight and later by the howl of the syren as some lord of the land flies homeward.

Certainly we should bar the children indoors; they might spoil the car if they were in the way; and how the dogs must annoy the pretty little boys dressed in white who guide the cars!

Oh it is wonderful how the motor has weaned us from old-fashioned ideas; there was a time when in the late evenings one liked to linger on the roads laden with the scent of the country and the wild flowers; but the wretched sentimental dawdling is at an end, the roses are covered with dust, the trees are white and killed by gasoline, the air is redolent with oil, the night is made hideous with the childish calls and one is blinded by the glare of two great eyes that are eloquent of the monster they hide.

Seriously, though, I think that the motorists arrogantly overstep the privileges of the road and forget that the pedestrian has as much right to any part of it as they have. They speed altogether too fast and have compelled parents to keep their children in by the fear of accidents, the number of which I believe has only been kept down by a kindly Providence. They should be made slow down very persistently in turning any corner; it is certain death for any child standing round a corner at present.

Motors spoil our country roads, they leave a path of dust and germs, and it is strange that those who ride in them do not notice how they themselves have developed hard, unpleasant expressions that do not speak of minds at rest.

Yours truly,
Sept. 25, 1912. PEDESTRAIN.

Hold Zimmerman for Seven Deaths in Poison Case.

Montreal, "Star," Sept. 17th.—A coroner's jury to-day held George Zimmermann, 40 St. Urban Street, criminally responsible for the death of a number of the foreign workmen who expired about the middle of August, after drinking wood-alcohol in a camp at St. Lambert. In all twelve foreigners met their death in this fashion, but, after over an hour's deliberation, the jury found that there was only evidence for concluding that seven of the deceased had met their death from poisoning. In the other five cases the symptoms were not conclusive.

Kost Bolahura, 11 St. Urban St., who had already been provisionally acquitted on a charge of manslaughter gave a general denial to questions suggesting that he had ever had alcohol in his house, or that he had sold any liquor to the deceased workmen. He knew the dead men by sight only, but had never had any dealings with them. Occasionally a few fellow-countrymen, with their wives, would spend an hour or two at his home, but there was never any drinking, and he never had any liquor in the house.
He had never seen any person to buy whiskey at 40 St. Urban street, when he himself had none.

Dr. St. George who had analysed the intestines of the deceased, stated that traces of wood-alcohol had been in the viscera of two of them. The entrails of the other men had been in-too great a state of decomposition to permit of wood-alcohol being definitely discovered, but the symptoms in each case were identically the same.

Mrs. Bolahura, wife of Kost Bolo-hura, denied ever having heard anything about the men taking part in a debauch about the middle of August.

Before George Zimmermann, 40 St.
Urban street, commenced to give his evidence, Coroner McMahon warned him that he was not required to answer any questions which might lead it to be believed that he was the cause of the death of the workmen.

Zimmermann also flatly denied ever having had any whiskey in his house, or having sold any. He was working and received a living wage, he stated, and had no need to peddle liquor.

Dr. E. Lefevre, resident surgeon of the Hotel Dieu, stated that on August 19 a man named Trefle Bellemarre had been admitted to that institution suffering from the effects of wood alcohol poisoning. Bellemarre, who had recovered, himself gave evidence and averred that he had bought the liquor from Benjamin Hippen, Licensed grocer, George street.

Lipsen, in the course of evidence, stated that he had no recollection of having served Bellemarre, but he had bought all his whiskey in the usual way, and had not tampered in any manner with it. If Bellemarre had ordered "high wine" whisky Lipsen was certain that he had been supplied with that article.

Coroner McMahon, in summing up, said that the evidence seemed to prove that, on Sunday, 18th August, the deceased had come into Montreal from St. Lambert and had visited Bellemarre's house with intent to buy whiskey. Bolahura had sent them on to Zimmermann, where they had obtained the liquor.

The coroner would have expected Zimmermann to frankly admit that he had sold the liquor, but to plead that he had bought it in all good faith as whisky and sold it as such. Instead of that, however, Zimmermann denied having had any dealings with the deceased. There was no evidence, the coroner added, which could connect Gipsy with the wilful selling of wood alcohol.

Coroner McMahon further threw out the suggestion, that the jury might request the Federal Government to have an inspection and analysis made of all whisky on sale in Montreal. This proposal, however, the jury did not act upon.

The jury held that seven of the deceased foreigners had died of wood alcoholic poisoning and held Zimmermann criminally responsible.
