A New England Farmer's Profitable Use of One Acre.

The Future of Sheep-Raising-Bees and Honey—A Good Creamery Floor— Hints to Poultrymen.

Care of Farm Manures. Cornell University Experiment Station has issued another bulletin on the production and care of farm manures. Two tons of manure from the horse stable exposed to rain, etc., like the average barn yard pile in six months was reduced in value from 32 80 per ton to $1 06, or 32 per cent. Manure per ton to $1 06, or 32 per cent. Manure from cows similarly treated lost 30 per cent. We take the control of t

A Cheap Silo.

On the question of how much a silo should cost, a bulletin of the New Hampshire Experiment Station says: "The day of costly silos is past, and it is this fact alone which enables the rapid extension of this system of storage. A wooden silo feeps its contents with less loss than a kione or cement one, chiefly because of the barn, having its own frame, roof, etc., can be built for $1 per ton of capacity, if above 15 tons capacity. Contracts can be let for the construction of a 100 ton silo, the construction of a loo ton silo, the construction of the station were unanimous in their choice of those grown where sulphate of potash and persons entirely unacquainted with the facts, selected without nesitation those grown where sulphate of potash entered largely into the composition of the fertilizers.

presses himself highly pleased with his cheap file experience last year. He constructed a new one in the bay of his barn using two sources of ordinary hemlock lumber, neither planed nor matched, with tar paper between, and painted inside with a coat of gas tar and gasoline mixed. It was simply a rough, air-tight box on a large scale, but it proved a great success for holding ensilage. It is not too late yet to build a small tail of you have a crop to put in it. Some prefer to dress and match the inside course of boards.

Prospects of Sheepmen.

In an institute address George Van Houten, of Lenox, Ia., said: Some say times change and there will soon be over-oroduction of sheep, as there now appears to be of cattle. How is it possible for this looccur in the future, as according to the statistics there are only about 40 per cent. of the number of sheep in the United States to provide mutton and wool for present demands? Our population has increased more rapidly than have our sheep, and with every flock-master doing his utmost to increase his product it will not be possible to fully supply American markets 20 years hence. Whether American flock-masters shall have the control of our markets is an economic problem to be settled later on; the state a fivend reace, and it won't be a month tips on the races, and it won't be a month tips on the races, and it won't be a month tips on the races, and it won't be a month time. economic problem to be settled later on; but one thing is certain—that with present conditions there is no other farm stock that can be relied on to return the high rate of profit that sheep have brought their owner during the last few years. While we cannot fore-know what conditions may exist in the future it is safe to assume that there will be an evening up. In other words, we export vast cattle products while we import a vast quantity of wool, and as a generation at least must pass away before our flocks can be increased to supply the demands of our own markets the outlook is ancouracting.

How to Use One Acre.

A. W. Cheever, of the New England Farmer, says that the nearest approach he has ever made towards obtaining the full use of an acre of land through the whole year was with an orchard, sown with winter rye in autumn and cut for feed early in the following May. The ground was then manured, plowed and sown to oats. These gave a rank growth, and were in blossom July 10. They were then cut and made into hay. Again the ground was manured, plowed and sown to barley, which was well headed by the middle of September, and was out of the way in time to gather the winter apples. These constituted the fourth crop. Winter rye could be again sown if desired, but the previous crops, five in number, including apples, were thought to be enough, and such treatment would doubtless give a fine crop of fruit, possibly worth more than the previous crops of rye, cats and barley taken together. There would have been time enough to sow another crop of winter rye, ready for the next outting in May. How to Use One Acre. time enough to sow another crop of winter rye, ready for the next cutting in May.

will be a great loss. From all the evidence of practical experience we have been able to see the best plan is to a specific process. The present the manure evenly (not in piles large or small) upon the fields as fast as made whenever practicable. If the fields have summer, say for the fall wheat field, then Prof. Roberts' suggestion to stow it hader cover of a chean 'lean-to' or shed, forming what is called a covered yard, will effect a wonderful saving and provide a shelter in which stock can be "exercised" and wasered while the stables are being cleaned in winter.

According to the bulletin quoted, the value of manures per ton from various animels is as follows: Horses, $2.75; sheep, $4.19, and swine, $3.18. The value of manure produced per animal per day is set down as follows: Horse, .052 bents; cow, .093; sheep, .615, and hog, .006.

With these important statements if mind, why so many farmers will persix in wasting that which might fill their pockets with gold, almost passes comprehension.
