The Convent Fire

Was Caused by the Explosion of Lamp.

Coolness and Discipline Saved the Children's Lives-How the Sisters Perished.

Quebec, Jan. 7 .- Further particulars of the awful calamity which caused the death of seven nuns at Roberval vent came out of the dormitory at the regular monastery hour of 5 a.m. The vestry man, in charge of the convent chapel, had lit tapers and lights about the infant Jesus in the cradie, preparatory to the morning prayers and matins recited thus during the month of January. But as the Ephipany is one of the greatest festivals of the Catholic calendar, extraordinary chapel, and it was the intention to illuminate brilliantly for the event. The vestry man had nearly finished lighting about the altar, when one of the colored lamps exploded, and the burning oil was thrown about on the lace decorations, artificial flowers, etc., and in a second the whole interior of the chapel was ablaze.

THE CHILDREN MARCHED OUT. The nuns ran about the convent, giving the alarm. The superioress ordered all the children out of the burning building. These were marched out in admirable order. Then the nuns them-selves were ordered out, and the 26 silently walked away from the convent. By this time villagers commenced to arrive on the scene of the conflagration, but such was the progress and intensity of the flames that nothing could be done to check the ravaging element, there being no water and no fire implements.

HOW THE SISTERS PERISHED. A group of sisters stood outside the building, devising some plans of res-cuing valuable property. Three of them entered the building and wended their way towards the chapel, and when anxiety over the length of their stay became painfully manifest, four more sisters entered the convent to their rescue, but as they, too, did not again appear, it was evident they had met with the most horrible of deaths. Frantic with grief at the loss of her nuns, the mother superior moaned aloud, but soon fortitude and courage aroused her spirits, and she proceeded to place the pupils and remaining nuns in charge of residents, where all sible attention was bestowed on them,

THE REMAINS RECOVERED.
