The aim new is to make a skate for fancy ckating that will turn in less than seven inches—the present minimum. There are about 50,000 rinks in America, and the demand for skates is greater than the supply. The craze will, of course die out, and even should it not the industry will be overdone. Meanwhile the makers of roller skates and the owners of roller-rinks are making the most of the of roller-rinks are making the most of th hining hour.

After some years of waried experience, my opinion on this matter is stronger now than ever it was previously. What has been shown as nothing less than a disaster in theatrical circles, the too close connection between the critical and the managerial, not to say literary and histrionic, departments, has circles, the too close connection between the critical and the managerial, not to say literary and histrionic, departments, has grave effect in other phases of our being; such effect can be traced without the least difficulty in racing life and racing journal-is such effect can be traced without the least difficulty in racing life and racing journal-lim. To see a journalist of repute being patronized by a mannikin miniou of fortune and worm of the hour, whom an irrational, if not an altogether insane, scale of weights has made rich, and what it is the fashion to call famous—to see the way in which some journalists of repute (sporting repute, that is) gratefully receive these mannikina?
 barronage -always turns my blood to verjuice. Doubtless the earnings of a second-rate middleweight jocksy are ten times as much as those of a first-rate sporting writer; but there is a good deal in this world that cannot be bought for money, nor should the fact that one man earns more than £5000 a year, while another has a difficulty in early 5000 bush. more than £5000 a year, while another has a difficulty in eking out £500 of itself, be a difficulty in prove without a shadow of doubt that the larger income means larger ability or increased social importance." From the New York Times we glean the following statistics of the roller skate industry: There are about 400 persons engaged in the manufacture of these skates, and the monthly product is not far from 300,000 pairs. The most of these cost about 55 cents a pair; are sold at wholesale at
