The door shut and Mr. Melborough sauntered back to his mirror set in antique dilver. "A little bit struck, I fanor," was ale satisfied thought as he glanced at his laultiess reflection. Then his practical shied turned to business.

"Name would be good, certainly," he said aloud, as he threw himself into a chair and began to coan the pages of Mrs. Honeybun's manuscript. He did not read lar. "By Jove?" he said aloud, as he firmed to his letter again, "if I published that the governor's ghost would rise and haunt me; and, what's worse, I should in all probability see myself in Bow street." Hone, Mrs. Honeybun, bnsy wiks gown acandal, five o'clocks and duns found week life by very quickly. She saw but little of her husband, and troubled herself less; all her energy, mental and physical, was turned to the consummation of one object —to obtain, if mattered not how, supremsely in notoriety over her rival and store, he tore her pocket handkerchief. "The complime of the consummation of the his stated, ale has sung, posed in tableaux vivants, invented a bonnet calculated to set all Lady Larkwell's hair on end, and from London to Sandown park behold, Lady Larkwell's notelyed, peans of glory for a daring swimming feat at Folkestone.

Mrs. Honeybun cried, she stamped, she tore her pocket handkerchief. "Think of something, noodle," she tore her pocket handkerchief, she tore her pocket handkerchief, whe tore her pocket handke

The month was nearly up, Mrs. Honeybun grew frantic Lady Larkwell was advertised to act for a charity; stalls, two guiness each. It was awinl; the book must come out.

The evening before the expiration of the time, Mrs. Honeybun gave a little dinner that the Continental to a chosen few. The acquaintances, Mrs. Melborough. He is going to bring out a book of mine shortly; are you not, Mr. Melborough?"

Mr. Melborough's voice was certainly not so clear as usual. Visions of debts and duns, accompanied by horrible thoughts of the deaths.

Mr. Melborough mused. In about a month or six weeks," he observed, quietly. "Ah! then I shall have the proofs directly, I suppose. Now, Mrs. Melborough, you must promise to read it. I hope you will come and have some afternoon tea with me by-and-by. Really, this is most delightful? I begin to think Smalltown a charming place."

Lady Larkwell unfolded her Mayfair Mugwump the week following Mrs. Honeybun's departure to Smalltowo, secure in the knowledge of her triumph over her hated rival, and was prepared for an hour's enjoyment, when suddenly she tore the unoffending paper to shrede, and cast the pieces to the four corners of the room. Her eyes had rested on a short paragraph, and her womaniy nature was for the nonce turned into that of a tigress: "I hear that Hon. Mrs. Honeybun has a novel in the press which will shortly appear. The story is said to contain the most exarting and original situations, and its advent will be warmly welcomed by Mrs. Honeybun's numerous and ardent will be warmly welcomed by Mrs. Honeybun's numerous and ardent will be warmly welcomed by Mrs. Honeybun's numerous and ardent will be warmly welcomed by Mrs. Honeybun's numerous and ardent will a pool in the press which will and ardent will be warmly welcomed by Mrs. Honeybun's numerous and ardent will be warmly welcomed by Mrs. Honeybun's numerous and ardent warm.
