Yesterday one of our leading solicitors, commenting on this tendency of newspapers to pander to morbid tastes, said: "The newspapers do a deal of harm in giving sensational reports of crime. Take a murder case. If the one accused of the deed is reasonable to the property of the case of the deed is reasonable to the property of the case of the deed is reasonable to be accused of the deed is reasonable to be accused of the deed is reasonable to be accused on the deed is reasonable to be accused on the deed is reasonable to be accused to the deed is reasonable case. If the one accused of the deed is guilty he should not be made a hero, nor given more notoriety than is necessary to chronicle his execution, and then there would remain but the horror of his crime and the justice of his sentence to remind us that he existed. There would be no columns of paper wasted, no time nor printers' ink lost in teaching us improved and modern methods of committing murder without danger of detection. No, this time ink, paper and talent should be used for the moral, intellectual and physical benefit of the community. Take, for example," said he, "that grand shoe house the guinane brothers are building at two fourteen Yonge-street. How comparatively little has been said about it in the public press, and yet it is going to be the tively little has been said about it in the public press, and yet it is going to be the largest and most perfect shoe house on the American continent! What mention is there of the enormous sacrifice they are now making in elearing off their stock preparatory to pulling down the main portion of their building? Why! I bought a pair of five dollar shoes there yesterday for two dollars! Did you read anything about that in the papers? My wife purchased a beautiful pair of fine Morocco walking shoes there for forty-five cents. Did you read anything about that in the papers? No! It's too trivial, I suppose, and yet columns and sheets of paper, gallons and barrels of ink, hours and weeks of valuable time, not to mention the vital force, the skill and ability of talented compositors are wasted in recounting the ghastly details of a brutal murder."
