

Permit me in closing to say that I wish you all well. I am quite sure that your opportunities here for securing an ample equipment in knowledge for your life's work have been all you could desire. The advantage you have taken of those opportunities I presume varies with you individually now even as it did in my day. One thing I do hope that you may all be going forth imbued with a real love for your profession, for after all and in a word that I believe to be the point on which, in future years will depend most largely your success or your failure. If a love for your profession has not been kindled during your study of it I doubt very much its growth in the practice of it. The study of Medicine is so elevating—so entirely removed from everything in the nature of the sordid and worldly while the practice of medicine well! is not always so. Again I must assure you that it has been a very sincere pleasure for me to have been here and I will now only remind you of the main purpose of my remarks. I hope and trust you may all see your way clear to decide that Canada or at least the Empire is good enough, and wide enough and great enough and deserving enough for a fair trial at least of its opportunities at your hands—I thank you.
