

whose whole Pamphlet is built upon the foregoing Insinuation, and is an Eccho to the Case of the Hanover Troops.

WHEN I advise my Country-men not to be seduced by crafty Incendiaries, and not precipitate themselves into a Sea of apparent Misfortunes; I would not be understood by any, (by you I am sure I shall not) to be a greater Friend to the Crown than the People: for if ever any Competition should arise, no Man in Britain would more zealously espouse the Cause of Liberty; which you, my Friend, know to be true, from being an Eye-witness of my opposing both the last and present Ministry, when in the wrong: and I can promise