Many Doubtful Islands and Sunk Rocks - New Routes to Be Opened By Panama Canal to Be Given Attention

London, July 15.—Six years at sea and a voyage of 210,000 miles to hunt and chart islands, reefs and banks of doubtful location is what the British Antarctic and Oceanographic Expedition now proposes to do for the benefit of the world's merchant marine. Originally Sir Ernest Shackleton and J. Foster Stackhouse intended only to survey and chart the coast of the Antarctic continent, looking for such menaces to shipping as might lie on their voyage down and back. But the explorers have decided two and a half years to their projected voyage, which will start next December.

The seven seas have never been accurately charted because, says Mr. Stackhouse, "being everybody's business it was nobody's business to do it." Even the north Atlantic has its doubtful islands and sunken rocks. Four mariners, previous to the Titanic disaster, reported seeing rocks near the point where the ship went down, and this one of the first things to be investigated by the Discovery, Polynesia, Melanesia and Malaysia are notorious for volcanic and coral obstructions, and the Panama Canal will open new routes through these dangerous seas.

Existing charts disclose facts which have a disturbing influence on traffic, such as the presence of shallow surroundings in areas of deep water. Such places will be carefully searched for submerged rocks. All corners of the world will be visited and studied by the expedition.

The Discovery is a wooden ship with steam auxiliary, especially designed for work in icy waters, and she will carry the latest sounding machinery. While the voyage is planned to last six years, the officers and crew are signed on for seven in event of delays.
