HER BAIRNS ARE ALL TO PRINCESS

Elder Daughter of Duke of Connaught is Devoted Mother

CROWN PRINCESS OF SWEDEN

Loses Popularity in Adopted Country by Constant Attention to Her Quartette of Children Rather Than to Affairs of State

(Times' Special Correspondence)

Stockholm, Sept. 5.—Crown Princess Margaret lately offered a prize for the most healthy and well-bred family with not lower than six children. When the winner, a locksmith's widow of Sodermanland produced eight blooming infants with only nine years' difference, 'twixt first and last, Crown Princess Margaret put the question: "Are you not frightened out of your life lest it should come to them?" "I have no time to be frightened," said the locksmith's widow. "I must work for their bread, Your Royal Highness."

Crown Princess Margaret has only four children, and she spends all her day and most of her nights worrying about their health. The eldest is Gustav Adolf, Sweden's future ruler but one, who is seven years old. When Crown Princess Margaret wants to show her very real affection for infants she goes to queer expedients, and once she was photographed in an attempt to kiss all the same time her youngest born, Princess Ingrid and Prince Bertil. The kiss failed and the picture was withdrawn; but now all over Sweden you see pictures of "Our Crown Princess with her bairns." Sentimental Swedes lay in stocks of these pictures and wonder if mother before ever worshipped her infants as does Crown Princess Margaret.

The crown princess is the eldest child of the Duke of Connaught; she was wedded in 1905 and is aged thirty-one. She brought from sea-girl Britain a love of the sea, and often she makes with her four babes, Gustav Adolf, Sigvard, Bertil and Ingrid, for the Chateau de Solfero. Solfero lies not far from Helsingborg on the narrowest part of the sound separating Sweden from Danish Zealand.

Crown Prince Gustav Adolf Oskar Frederick, being more assiduous as archaeologist than as papa finds that Crown Princess Margaret spoils all four. So do other people. Swedes are displeased. The trouble is that though Crown Princess Margaret has been seven years on Sweden's windy shores she speaks villainous Swedish and, therefore her children—the two that can speak at all—speak Swedish with the finest London accent and English with the finest Swedish burr. The newspaper "Tidning" published an ironical article headed "Barriers of Swedish" and ended it with the remark, "A Swede can learn English in three months; and an English princess ought to learn Swedish in eighty months."

Affectionate Crown Princess Margaret was incensed with this, and she took Gustav Adolf, Sigvard, Bertil and Ingrid off to windy Solfero, where their Swedish got worse than ever.

When Crown Princess Margaret leaves her bairns or any of them behind, then trouble begins. Telegrams fly all day, and telephone bells ring to ask about them. Naturally she is happy only when her bairns are with her; and when last month she made a tiresome journey to Osterund in the north to open a school, and took Gustav Adolf and Sigvard all the way, while Sigvard fought his future sovereign furiously, and ended by lassoing the royal leg with a window strap. Because Bertil and Ingrid were not with her, Crown Princess Margaret suffered woe, and she telephoned suddenly to Stockholm on learning that Bertil had a cough. The Osterunders were wrathful. But in truth all Sweden is displeased with its Crown Princess, and the cause is always her children.

Crown Prince Gustav Adolf, senior, knows all about this, but he is too busy with archaeology to interfere, and perhaps he thinks that the beatings of Gustav Adolf, Jr., are good training for kingship. And Gustav Adolf, Sr., has his own weaknesses; he is maliciously absent-minded and forgets unparadoxically to worry about his babies' health as long as they are well. In fact he is a lax, indifferent person, entirely unfit to worship at the shrine which Crown Princess Margaret has built to her frail, imperilled bairns.

Altogether it is a rough business hav-

Daily Hints For the Cook

Spanish Cream
Six eggs, one quart milk, 1/2 box gelatine, one scant cup sugar, one small teaspoon vanilla. Soak gelatine in a little milk until soft. Boil milk and gelatine 15 minutes. Set to cool while treating yolks and sugar, then stir in the yolks. Boil until it begins to thicken, then beat the whites to a froth. Stir into curd beat hard and pour into molds.

Egg Cream
Beat a raw egg to a stiff froth, add 1 tablespoon of white sugar and 1/2 glass of blackberry or cherry wine. Beat well and add 1/2 glass of cream. Beat thoroughly and use at once. This is a full meal for an invalid and good where troubles of throat, mouth or stomach prevents solid food being used.

ONE RESULT OF A STRIKE

(Bangor Commercial)

It was a very bitter blow that the silk weavers of Paterson, N. J., inflicted upon their city and themselves by the recent strike which was fomented by the agitators of the Industrial Workers of the World. The losses incurred by the strike run into the millions, but the misery caused cannot be estimated. One aftermath of the strike that has just been reported shows how the effects of the controversy are felt long after the settlement was effected and the mill once more set in operation.

We read that a silk manufacturer finding himself ruined by the enforcement of his business, committed suicide, but this is not the only home it desolate. It appears that many former silk mill employees left the city during the strike to seek employment elsewhere. No less than 200 of these 1 now disappeared from view, leaving wives and children to be supported by the municipality. Some will eventually return, but there will doubtless be many who will not.
