Tragedies of Two Beautiful Women in Europe are Told.

Berlin, April 3.—Marie Woelfling, divorced wife of a former Austrian archduke, has been buried as a pauper at Schreiberhau, Silesia, after a life of tragic romance.
She was Marie Ritter, a housemaid of remarkable beauty, and was engaged to a business man when she met the former Austrian Archduke Leopold Woelfling, a brother of the ex-Crown Princess of Saxony. He had renounced his title to marry a woman whom he subsequently divorced.
Leopold was so infatuated with Marie that he bribed her lover with a large sum to break off the engagement.
They were married, but were divorced after four years. Marie tried various ways of earning a living, but finally fell ill, and for three years lay in hospital paralyzed. Her former husband band lost all his fortune in the Austrian collapse of 1918, and married again during her illness.
