The Morocco Difficulty.

We have no doubt that the public utterances of the leading men of the British Cabinet were meant to clear the atmosphere and to make known the position from which she would not recede. France in particular and Spain in a less degree have been extending the sphere of influence in Morocco, in a sort of way taking control of large sections of Morocco. Germany seized on Agadir in order to be in at the partition, should it take place, as it apparently was taking place. In the July issue of The Empire Review, Mr. Edward Dicey says:

"In these circumstances it is hardly likely that Germany will remain content to see the trade, if not the territory of Morocco divided between France and Spain without making a move of some kind. I should not therefore be surprised if before many days have elapsed some overt action is not taken to assert the rights of Germany in Morocco. It has transpired that before the signing of the Algeiras Act, a secret Treaty was entered into between France and Spain delimiting the territory of the Sultan of Morocco into French and Spanish spheres of influence in the event of the collapse of the Moroccan authority. But according to the Temps no action was to be taken by Spain without France being first consulted. Had Spain therefore admitted France to her confidence as far as France was concerned no difficulty would have arisen. But what about Germany and the other Signatory Powers? A secret Treaty could in no way bind them."

What Mr. Dicey expected has taken place. Germany has seized Agadir. On this possible event, Mr. Dicey said:

"Of one thing I am very certain, this country is not going to pull the chestnuts out of the fire for France. Such diplomatic advice as we think fit we shall undoubtedly tender, but the question of 'diplomatic support' will have to remain in abeyance. We are not intending to fall out with Germany to keep France in the commercial saddle in Morocco, and we certainly are not prepared to quarrel with Spain because that power claims equal rights with France in Morocco." Mr. Dicey was astray in his prediction as to the attitude of Britain. That attitude is apparently to give diplomatic support, if need be, to France, to prevent Germany obtaining a permanent lodging in Morocco if France so determines, and in any case to insist that Germany shall not keep a naval port which may menace British trade routes.
