"She had black hair and such lovely dark eyes—they were so beautiful, only very sad. Her face was thin and very white, as though she had been sick a long time; and then she had such a sweet, gentle way, and spoke so kindly to me. Aunt Audrey, I think, next to you, she is the loveliest lady I have ever seen."

'And he-the gentleman-what was he "And he—the gentieman—what was he

"He was tall and large, with brown

"They had a splendid horse," he went on, with animation. "I think it was the finest one I have ever seen, and he did ok so grand when he reared upon hind legs and pricked up those silky ears of his. But where did you meet this Mr. Halstead, Aunt Audrey?" he denly questioned, remembering that had not yet acknowledged the ac-

Audrey hesitated. uld she tell the boy the sad story of her life? He was wise and considerate beyond his years, and his tenderest sym-bathies would be hers. But somewhow she shrank from giving at oit. Sometime she meant to tell all about it; tonight, however, she not feel quite equal to it; her strength did not feel quite equal to it; her strength had already been severely taxed by learning that her old-time lover had been 80 near her. So she merely answered: "When I was a young girl, and my barents were living, I spent a few weeks in New York, and went a good deal into society, and I am quite sure that this Mr. Arthur Halstead is the same gentleman whom I met at that time. I afterward heard of his marriage to a Miss ida Montrose, but I have never seen him since. I am very glad, howover, that you lent them such manly assistance today; and I am glad, too, that they know you are my boy," she concluded, fondly. "Now," she added, after a moment of dience, "I am going to send you away; for I wish to get all the rest I can, so as to be fresh again tomorrow morning. Good-night, Rich; you are such a comfort to me."

She drew him down to her, and kissed

She drew him down to her, and kissed him on his lips and forehead, and then, with a smile and a fond pat on his cheek, she sent him downstairs to Mrs. Allen, who, she said, must be lonely.

But as soon as the door closed after him she buried her face in her pillow, with a heartbroken sob.

"So near and yet so far," she murmured. "I cannot bear it even now, after all these long years; and if it were not for that dear boy, the future would seem almost unendurable to me."

She still had the card which Rich had given her, and laying it beneath her cheek, she fell to sobbing as if her heart were breaking.

re breaking. I am weak, weak," she cried, "to love a man who is the husband of another; but I cannot help it—I gave myself to him for all time in those sweet old days. Oh. Arthur! we made a lifelong mistake—or, rather, I made a great mistake; I never should have yielded to papa; I ought to have considered our mutual happiness, and not tried to right me wrong by committing another. Yet t is folly and weakness to grieve so vildly at this late day." But Audrey Waldemar was not a weak woman, notwithstanding she had broken down so completly upon learning that Arthur Halstead had been so near her She fought her grief out by herselffought with her regrets, her longings and her undying love, until she gained the victory and came forth from her chamber the next morning her own lovely self once more. She was a trifle paler than usual, but as sweet and calm as if no tempest of grief had swept over her, bowing her proud spirit to the very earth.

But the peaceful quiet and the enjoy-ment of that mountain retreat was over for her; a strange restlessness took posfor her; a strange restlessness took pos-session of her, and only a few days later she informed Mrs. Allen that she had decided, after all, to act upon her sug-gestion and take a trip up through the Canadas, and then return to New York. Accordingly, a week from the very day on which Rich left Arthur Halstead and his invalid wife, they left the green hills of Vermont and turned their steps still farther porth. still farther north.
They proceeded to Quebec, where they spent two or three days, and then took a steamer up the St. Lawrence to Mon-party of young people about rich's age, or a little older.

There were four young ladies from fourteen to eighteen, and two lads of fifteen or sixteen, and they were as gay and happy as it is possible for young people to be.

"It will be so nice for Rich," Audrey said to Mrs. Allen, "for he has never had much society, and I shall accept Mrs. Campbell's invitation to join their party; their plans are very nearly the same as ours, and it will be pleasanter for us all."

same as ours, and it will be pleasanter for us all."

There were also on board the steamer two characters who afforded considerable amusement to the more aesthetic pleasure-seekers about them.

They were Mr. George Washington Starkey and Miss Martha Ann Starkey, of Starkeyville, Maine.

The former was about fifty years of age. He was tall and large of frame. The former was about fifty years of age. He was tall and large of frame, with an awkward manner and gait. There was a party of eight besides himself, four of whom were young people.

They worked busily all the forenoon, and pails and baskets were rapidly filled with the fragrant, crimson fruit, and when the dinner hour came everyone was hungry for the cold chicken, tongue and ham, bread and cheese and doughnuts, and all those homely dainties that never taste as well anywhere else as they do in the country.

Then, as they lounged about, after they had dined, for an hour or so before resuming their berry-picking, Rich, boylike, started off by himself upon an exploring expedition.

He loved the mountains and forests—they inspired him with awe and reverence by their grandeur and strength.

Today he came across some lovely gray mosses and lichens, and knowing how delighted she would be with them, he fashioned a little basket out of some slender twigs, decorating it with partridge vines and berries, and then filled it with his treasures.

It was a dainty little woodland offering, and after it was completed he went on climbing the steep mountain side until suddenly he emerged from the dense forest into a road.

BRITISHERS WIN PALMA TRO-

ed States for competition between the scores: rifle associations of the world, was won today by the British team, after the hardest struggle ever fought on Rockcliffe range, if not, indeed, one of the keenest ever witnessed in the world. The total scores far surpassed those of last year, when the Canadians captured the magnificent trophy and brought it to Canada. They lost it today, but there was no hard feeling Being loyal Britons, the Canadians were glad to see it go to the motherland, but no one would have begrudged it to the Americans, who put up a magnificent fight and showed themselves true sportsmen. GLOOMY AT THE START. The weather was somewhat gloom; it the start, but the day was not to bad on the whole, and from early morning a large crowd witnessed th competition.

Lieut.-Col. Hon. J. M. Gibson, presi dent of the D. R. A., was referee, and only one challenge was made during yards.

At the 800-yard range, the Americans had a lead of 22 over the British and 42 over the Canadians, and things looked to be a "cinch" for Uncle Sam's men.

At the 900-yard range, however, they fell behind, two of their team going to pieces. The British team went to the 1,000yard range with a lead of 12, and just held their own, the match ending with a majority of 12 for John Bull's representatives. EXCITING FOR A WHILE.

For a while it was exciting. One of the Britons made a miss, and the lead fell off to about 5. It looked like nip and tuck, but a few shots made them come ahead again. It was a splendid finish. Instead of weakening or unnerving under the excitement, Fraser and Lawrence piled on bullseye after bullseye, and, when the last shot was fired, at 5:45 o'clock, the struggle was over, and victory was with the British.

After the match adjournment was made to the D. R. A. executive building, where Lieut.-Col. Gibson called on the Governor-General to present the trophy to Major Freemantle, for the winning team, and said that the competition was the keenest he had ever witnessed. He omplimented the Americans on their pluck and hoped that next year Americans, Canadians, Australians. South Africans, and other teams would all compete for the prize. Major Freemantle made a neat reply, expressing the gratification of the team at the result, but said it was a poor way to requite the Canadians for so many favors and kindnesses to steal the shield from them. His excellency then presented Lieut. Holcomb, of the American team, with the gold medal for the highest individual score. He made 194—two more than Sergt. Lawrence, of the British team. The plucky fellow was given three cheers led by Col. Gibson. The bronze medals were presented to all the competitors on behalf of the D. R. A., and the struggle for 1902 passed into history. The total of each man was as follows:

At the stretch he had the leadcome home alone, but Shaw on Zoroaster, who was riding a splendid race, made his move and was a head in front of the fast Major at the eighth pole. Odom, however, was not to be denied, and, riding a wonderful strong finish, managed to snatch a victory out of the fire by a nose. Zoroaster was second, eight lengths in front of Slipthrift. The time, 3:58, was good, as the track was muddy. AT HARLEM. Chicago, Sept. 13.-Jockey Winslett made a farce out of the mile race against the world's record of 1:37 4-5 between Jiminez and Rose Tree, by position to the Corbett-McGovern easing up the latter all through the last eighth of a mile. That the Corrigan mare was easily the better of the two there could be no doubt, as the race was run today, but the time of 1:39 3-5 was not within a second and two-fifths of the track record. What caused Winslett to ease Rose Tree up when he knew the race was against time was a puzzle to the judges as well as the public. The two took a flying start and raced head and head to the back stretch, where Jiminez forged to the front by a length and a half and took the rail. At the far turn Rose Tree again joined him and turning for home had a length to the good. Jiminez was plainly beaten, but regardless of the fact that the breaking of the record was the main with James J. Corbett as referee." object in view, Winslett took a firm hold of Rose Tree and she finished under, a stout pull and only in a com-

Buffalo, N. Y., Sept. 13.-Tommy Ryan arrived in Buffalo last evening, accompanied by his trainers and handlers, and the first thing he did when stepping from his sleeping car was to emphatically deny the stories circulated that he was not in the best condition for Monday night's contest with Carter. was careful reviewed by President Rooseveit. Col. Guillot is anxious to accept the invitation, and has forwarded it to the militia department at Ottawa.

The McLachlan farm, near Inwood, has been sold to S. F. McTavish, of Mosa, who takes immediate possession. The Alex. F. McTavish 100 acre farm in Mosa has been sold to D. H. McLachlan for the handsome sum of $4,000.

Titus Fuller, who was born in Woodstock in 1829, died at Windsor on Thursday. The deceased had been engaged in the livery and dairy business for 32 years.

Carter was visited at his quarters at Fort Erie yesterday afternoon. He was putting the finishing touches to his training by punching the bag and skipping the rope for over an hour. Several hundred sports saw him while at work and a large number of these started out to look for Ryan wagers, so confident are they that Carter will be the next middleweight champion.

Herreshoffs has been notified that a cup defender is wanted, and he is now making arrangements so that the new boat can started as soon as possible after the challenge has been received and accepted. A syndicate is to be formed to defray the cost of building and running the boat, and it is said that ex-Commodore E. D. Morgan, who last year had charge of the Columbia, is to head the syndicate and will sail the new boat.

There has been some talk of Cornelius Vanderbilt having a cup defender built instead of a big schooner. Mr. Vanderbilt has become a very enthusiastic yachtsman, and on the Rainbow this year he has had E. A. Williard and Capt. Clayton Huff. The Rainbow has won her share of prizes, and there is no reason why a 90-footer in the same hands should not do well. Little work will have to be done with the Columbia and Constitution to fit them out for the season. They will want new sails, but that is all, and it is understood that the Herreshoffs are already at work on the sails, so that they will not be bothered with the work when they have lots of other work to do later on. EARLIER. Glasgow, Sept. 13 .- Sir Thomas Lipton has yielded to strong representations regarding the advisability of earlier races for the America's cup than usual and he has decided, after consultation with William Fife, the designer of the Shamrock, III., to name August, expressing a preference for the latter end of that month, when he hopes for steadier winds and less chance for fiascos.
