Under- Currents

By The Duchess

"He lives!" she shrieks. "The devil, and the master dead! Why don't you finish the famous work that he, pointing to Dyrart's corpse, began? Stand aside, and let me show you how to stifle the breath in a serpent, such as—"

"Be quiet, woman," says Peyton vehemently; "and if you have any regard for your master's memory, thank God upon your knees that he did not die a murderer."

He forces her backward. "See here," he goes on presently, when her fury has somewhat abated.

"For the honour of the house you have served so long, I would ask you to help us to bring this man back to life; and more—to conceal all knowledge of what has passed to-night. Mr. Dyrart," indicating Seaton, who is looking sick and stunned, "tells me you have a singular acquaintance with medicine, and even surgical matters. If you can patch up this fellow without the aid of a doctor, I see no reason why your master's share in this night's work be not concealed for ever. You are to be trusted?"

"Ay, in his cause," with a nod towards the stiffening corpse of the man who for so long time she had served so faithfully for meagre thanks and grudging wage.

Together they carry the two bodies into the house, under cover of the silent night. Mr. Dyrart to his own room; and then up stairs, and through the endless corridors, that other groaning, scarcely living burden; up always, until a disused chamber in a remote corner of the old tower is reached, where it is beyond probability that anyone in the house, save these three who know, will ever seek to penetrate.

CHAPTER LII

A fellow of no mark nor likelihood.

Mark now, how a plain tale shall put you down.

Of that night's fatal work the countryside remains in complete ignorance. Of Mr. Dyrart's sudden death it hears the following morning with a feeling of strong curiosity, but with none of regret. The funeral takes place on the third day is small, certainly; yet, considering all things—the dead man's open hostility to his neighbours, and the dearth of hospitality that characterized his sojourn amongst them—larger than might have been expected and at all events select. Amongst others Lord Riversdale attended—out of compliment, it was supposed to Seaton, as he and the old man had never so much as seen each other's features.

But it was found impossible to conceal the existence of Sedley from the two girls. Peyton had undertaken to give them a rather careful account of what had happened; and in truth when all was told, he was almost a much at sea about it as were the girls.

"That gaunt person had been appealed to, threatened, cajoled, all to no effect. The morning after the accident she had incidentally let out that his name was Sedley, and Peyton had at once pounced upon her. 'You—knew him?' he said. 'Why did you not say so before? Go on now, at all events; it is most necessary we should get a clue to this mystery. What do you know of him?'"

"Nothing good." "I dare say. If you had said something bad it would perhaps have been nearer the truth."

"I didn't say it, however." "At least try to understand that any assistance you can give Mr. Dyrart now will help him to clear the memory of his father."

Grunch lifted her head there, and gave him a queer look.

"Clear him from what?" she said. "The suspicion of having at least meant to murder this man."

"Oh!" said she. "Why seek to clear him of that? It would have been a deed well done. The only pity in it is that though he tried, he failed."

"We will not go into that," said Peyton, who was openly disgusted. "The question really is, what do you know of this Sedley?"

"Nothing good," repeated she doggedly. And though they tried her in a hundred ways they got no more out of her than that.

Meantime that hint, that Sedley's redemption from death would remove a stigma from the name of the old master now lying in the family vault, had done more perhaps for Sedley's recovery than anything else could. She attended him night and day with as close a devotion as though he had been the one thing dear to her on earth.

And presently the mists of death rolled by him, and he emerged from the fatal cloud, weak indeed, but with his sense once more restored, and the eager throbbings of returning life beating in every vein.

With too a wild longing for revenge: a savage determination to repay the man who had treacherously smitten him to the ground, a hundred-fold for that one deed. He cast aside the thought of the paltry sum for which he had stipulated as the price of his silence. Five, it had been; well, it should be ten thousand now; five for that old story, and five for this last new act, that would have placed him in that outer darkness from whence no man returns to establish any claim or tell the most damnable tale.

To Prevent Appendicitis

Here is the Experience of a Man Who Escaped the Surgeon's Knife

You hear almost daily of some one going to the hospital for an operation for appendicitis. Do you know of anyone who was ever really well afterwards?

Besides the risk and expense of the operation, the results are usually disappointing. For this reason alone it is well worth while to try to avoid appendicitis by keeping the digestive system in healthful condition.

Many have written us about Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills as a preventive and cure for appendicitis. This letter is a fair sample of the cases described.

Mr. John Poole, R.R. No. 5, Dresden Ont., writes: "I was taken very sick with severe pains and cramps in my stomach. I called in a doctor who said I had appendicitis in the worst form and my case was very serious. He gave me medicine which relieved me at that time, but I was far from being cured. He said I would have to go through an operation before I would be well, but this I did not wish to do. One day in looking through Dr. Chase's Almanac I saw that Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills were recommended for appendicitis if taken in time, so I thought I would try them. I took them regularly for two years, and now I am perfectly cured. I can do all kind of hard work without any trouble. I would not be without Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills in the house under any consideration, for I can truly say that they will do just when is claimed of them."

Perhaps the one greatest sale of health is that which calls for daily movement of the bowels. With this program in effect there is no danger from appendicitis or similar dangerous diseases.

Chronic constipation of the bowels is cured by Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills because they get the live in healthful working order. In other words they get at the cause of the trouble and remove it, thereby effecting thorough and lasting benefit.
