GUN IN HANDS OF LITTLE BROTHER KILLS SISTER

Sherbrooke, Que., Oct. 28—Marie Anne Madeau of Jackman Station, Maine, was brought to the St. Vincent De Paul Hospital last evening from the B. & M. train and died soon after her arrival here.

It appears that her brother, five years of age, picked up a gun that was lying on the floor, pointed it at his sister, pulled the trigger, the shot entering the child's abdomen.

Bernier, The Tailor

British Oppose Return To Old Scarlet Uniforms, As They Prefer the Khaki

THE British War Office has decided to restore scarlet as the full dress uniform of the army. The plan is now attacked by the noted military expert, Maj.-Gen. Sir Frederic Maurice, in the London News. The general writes:

"I have been trying to test the opinions of those who have to wear uniforms on the question of the reintroduction of some form of the old full dress. It is commonly assumed that the change is advocated by the old regular officers, but I can find no evidence of this among those of them who are still serving.

"At a recent gathering of regular officers I took the opinion of 21 who had worn scarlet tunics and may have to wear them again, and I found that 19 of them were in favor of keeping khaki as the full dress of the army. The old regular officer will, in fact, be much harder hit in his pocket by the change than will the ranker, for the grant which the War Office proposes to make to those who have received commissions since 1914 is liberal and should cover the initial expenses, but the officer who was serving before the war will get nothing.

"The slim subaltern of 1914 does not often find when he goes to his tailor in 1920 that his waist measurement is what it was, and most men, when they take their tunics out of camphor, will find some difficulty in buttoning them. This will mean a new tunic at double the pre-war price, and without official help to meet the cost; so that from the narrowest and most personal point of view there is ground for asking, Is it worth it?

"The idea that a scarlet coat will help recruiting is laughed at. Many regular officers believe that it will have the exactly contrary effect. The modern soldiers hate wasting time over 'spit and polish,' and the old full dress meant hours of work with button-stick, brass polish and and blanco, the 'real soldiering' of the pre-war sergeant-major. When he goes out for a walk he wants to be reasonably comfortable, but if he is in a red coat he has to be thinking all the time of what he is doing. If he puts his elbow on a dirty bar or leans against a greasy counter he has to send his coat to the tailor's shop and pay for having it cleaned.

"The pleasure of ogling nursemaids in a fancy kit does not compensate for its disadvantages, and I believe it to be an illusion that full dress of the old type is popular with the men. Recruiting will be helped by giving the soldier while he is serving the chance of fitting himself for civil life when he leaves the army, and by finding for him an assured position when he has taken the chance. The worst enemies of the recruiting sergeant are the unemployed ex-service man and the man who through no fault of his own has suffered from the war.

"This brings me to one of the arguments against spending money on scarlet which appeals most strongly to the serving soldier. He knows that there are to-day thousands of disabled and thousands of widows who are in dire distress. He knows also that the sum of $15,000,000, even if its expenditure were spread over a term of years, as the War Office proposes in the case of the new uniforms, would go a very long way to relieve this distress.

"The Prime Minister tells deputations of ex-service men that we simply cannot afford to do more than has been done for those who have suffered fighting for their country, and says, as is the case, that we are doing more for the sufferers than other countries.

"Such statements convince no one when money can be found for scarlet cloth and trimmings. Lord Haig has given up his hard-earned leisure and has never lost an opportunity of appealing to the Government to raise the allowances of the disabled, the widow and the orphan to a scale which will allow them to live in decency. As he has not been able to get this done, he is asking the public to come forward. Only those who, like myself, are in daily touch with the conditions, know how great the need is, but obviously the charitable will think twice before giving when money is to be found to dress soldiers and is not to be had for distressed soldiers.

"There is another argument against the change which has great weight with the army of to-day. The scarlet coat was the full dress of the army because it was the battle dress of the army. The tailors in peace time altered it almost out of recognition in the search for smartness, but every loop and button at one time had a meaning. Helmets and busbies were worn for exactly the same reason as the 'tin hat' — to save the head, not merely to look pretty. The raison d'etre of the red coat was that it had been worn at Blenheim, Minden, Vittoria, Waterloo and Inkerman.

"The raison d'etre of the khaki tunic is that it was worn at the Marne, Ypres, the Somme, Amiens and Cambrai. The old tunic has become a fancy dress, khaki has won its place as the historic dress of the British army. It is respected throughout the world and on that ground alone it should be the soldier's dress of honor."
