During the last campaign one of the favor ite motioes was "Mend your shoes abroad and the cobbler starves at home." If that was true then it is true now, and we have artists resident in Canada quite as competent to paint a portriat as Mr. Mercier. Why then the work was sent to England is simply "one of those things no fellow can understand."

THERE LATELY died in England a man who has done more service to his country than thousands whose names are household words. This was Prof. Postgate. Working as a boy in a grocer's shop, he became disgusted with the adulterations he saw practised, and resolved when he got the chance to try and arouse public opinion on the subject. This he was at length enabled to do, through one of the members for Birmingham, and the recommendations of the select parliamentary committee, now law, city papers by former secretaries. against adulteration were almost entirely based on Mr. Postgate's recommendations, which have done very much to secure to Mothers and nurses cannot be too careful the poor man especially the worth of his

Such old books, if their matter the landed aristocracy of Great Britain (Applause.) The fiery cross of land reform ligatens the hill tops of Scotland; the waters are flooding the world. What is one man, what is one administration, against the spirit of the age? Why, this seeme and beautiful spirit laughs at a race, or a great name, when it sets itself in opposition to the great movement of civilization. Do you remember, in that old legend of the northern mythology, where a giant un dertakes to drink up what seems a tiny stream ? But, as he proceeds in the task, h finds the stream connects with the great ocean, and he is trying the vain and superfluous task of drinking up the ocean. Now, Mr. Gladstone sees only 5,000,000 or 6,000, and to a certainty it will not be offered in 000 Irishmen; he doesn't see the great spirit of humanity, the civilization of the A REPORTER UNCOURTEOUSLY

(Applause. hay, for 700, has asserted itself. (Applause.) He is engaged in a task which, considering the race, is impossible. You may weigh it against what gallant and persistent race you please; you may take Poland, the most gallant people in Europe, that flung the Turk back into Constantinople, and saved the cross from the crescent; and yet Poland is a name trodden out with the limits of 200 years of Russian oppression.
