To the Editor of the Weekly Monitor: DEAR SIR.--If a party picks up on the streets of the town any article, even of the least value, and fails to advertise the same, so that the owner may have an opportunity of recov-ering it, is it not dishonest? Some weeks ago, the writer dropped a small mink fur collar on the street within five minutes afterwards it was picked up, but the finder has not in any way advertised it. It has come to be the saying that if you lose anything in Bridge-town you will never recover it. Are our people so dishonest? X.
