

The' beam and wool are knotted with chill,
The' blitc is wild in its rovings still.
Has the Titan snared it with gentle coils :
Will he force it down midst sullen walls,
Cramped and crowded till it refrain,
And shrink into liquid form again ?
Perhaps as when at first the earth
Appeared enveloped at its birth ?
Whelmed in waters and wrapt in shade,
Before the kingdom of air was made.

Forced to accept another mold.
It wraps itself in mysterious cold ;
Freezes the glacier to snowy flecks :
Caught in its grasp a power awakes,
A power, concealed for a purpose appears,
To aid in drying the sad earth's tears.
That walls of man and groans of beast
May minute a moment's lull at least.
Yea, tells of earth, despoiled, forlorn,
And labors of animals overborne,
Moving away may see the esp.
With the bitter draft they shuddered to sup.
That the hounded and jaded and toil-opprest,
May dream of a day of holy rest.
