"I say, Larry, isn't that a new tune?"

"That's just where you're right," said Larry. "Last night I was out on the hotel piazza, and I heard singing. I walked around the corner until I saw a light in the little chapel. They were singing 'Happy day,' and it was a good tune, and Larry pulled out a paper from his pocket and read:

"Oh happy day that fixed my choice
On thee, my Saviour and my God!"

It sounds happy, doesn't it?" he asked. "There's going to be another meeting next Sunday evening, and I guess I'll go."

"I'll go too," said his friend; "I'd like to hear that tune."

"So it came about that two boys from the big hotel sat in the little chapel every Sunday evening during the summer vacation.

"Let's ask for a new heart, too," Larry whispered to Joe.

One day some one said: "I wonder what has happened to Larry? He doesn't get mad any more, and fly at a fellow as he used to."

"I'll tell you what's happened," said Joe, who overheard; "he hopes he has a new heart."
