

PIET,
Stationers,

Baltimore.

ED:

WER EXTREMITY,
USPENSORY APPA-
E INJURIES, Fully
with Numerous Cases
ESSOR NATHAN R.
ol. 8vo., printed on toned
da. Price $3.00.

St. Vincent de Paul. By full gilt, $2.00.

ious narrative of events
nde, depicted under the versed in the history of sle for illustrating the shes us with a series of es of France during the spect of romance utterly unknown yet interested
dge acquired under this is sympathies be enlisted e greatly enhanced. The absence of all religious se differing from him in

Miss MARIA EDGEWORTH.
of the following books,
o Frank." "Rosamond,"
nd.

gendre. With Additions
the Polytechnic School;
om the Eleventh French
ndent and Professor of Lexington, Va.

dition of Legendre, with eleve of the Ecole Poly-al text of Legendre, not n the simple demonstra-
cylinder, cone and sphere.
The Theory of Transversals;
given Perimeter; together
dent in the demonstra-
al Problems.

re's Geometry constitutes itary Institute. The folly been published:

of Beginners.....$0 45
academies.....0 75
.....0 50
.....2 00
.....2 50
to the French Lane, La. Square 16mo.,
.....0 60

"We have seen no American Poem for Years Superior to it."—LAND WE LOVE.

JUST PUBLISHED--THE GREAT SOUTHERN POEM,

"BEECHENBROOK,"

A RHYME OF THE WAR,

BY MRS. MARGARET J. PRESTON, OF LEXINGTON, VA.

AN ENTIRELY NEW EDITION. BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATED FROM DESIGNS BY WILLIAM L. SHEPPARD, OF RICHMOND, VA. SMALL 4TO., BOUND IN FINE CLOTH, GILT EDGES, $3.50. MORRIS ARTIECK, $5.00. THIS EDITION OF THIS MOST CELEBRATED POEM IS SETTER UP IN BEAUTIFUL STYLE, AND IS NOT SURPASSED BY ANY OF THE BOOKS ISSUED FROM THE PRESS OF THE NORTHERN CIVIL. ALSO, NOW READY--A CHEAP EDITION. SEVENTH THOUSAND. 12mo., CLOTH, BEVELED BOARDS--PRICE $1.75. CLOTH, GILT EDGED, $1.75. SENT FREE BY MAIL ON RECEIPT OF PRICE.

Notices of the Press.

A publisher's printed estimate of the sale of his publications is usually somewhat imaginative; to use a word here but serviceable quotation, "The wish is often father to the thought." Yet, in this case, we see no reason to doubt the entire veracity of Messrs. Kelly & Piet in announcing "fifth thousand" on the title page of this volume. It is one which, we should judge, would be immensely popular among the people for whom it was written, and to whose sectional pride and prejudices it appeals in more ways than one. In all respects it is essentially Southern, and, in most, it is praiseworthy. In two points particularly they challenge Southern admiration: in the first place, they are not absolutely trash, which is quite an advance on the majority of Southern verse; and in the second place, their merit is even sufficient to dimly foreshadow a time when the Sunny South shall achieve intellectual emancipation in a literature of its own, and be no longer dependent on New England for poetry as well as piety, politics and prints. To the author's own people, therefore, unjudged as yet by the worship of many literary idols, her book must be peculiarly grateful; even we of the North who are not tainted by that sombre fanaticism that sees no good in Nazareth, may find in it much to admire and applaud. The verse is graceful and flowing, and the language and sentiment prove the author to be a lady of refined and cultivated taste. The story of Beechenbrook—a story mournfully true to thousands of aching hearts—is simply and gracefully told, and some of the shorter poems interspersed—Only a Private and John a Battle—are not without pathos.—The Mountaineer.

We regard the poem as one of very considerable merit, and at times the author's score in the highest strains of martial poetry.

The dirge of Ashby is one of the most beautiful and touching elegiac effusions we have ever read.

The rhythm is faultless, and in regard to its poetical excellence, the "Charge of the Light Brigade" was not conceived in a higher spirit of inspiration.—Catholic Mirror.

The modest little volume "Beechenbrook" is a poem with a smooth versification. Occasionally there are passages of pathos and tenderness that almost rise to power, the death of McPherson for instance.—N. Y. Day Book.

As a souvenir of the war, as well as for its many literary merits, this volume will enjoy a permanent popularity.—Richmond Waig.

Its perusal will doubtless evoke many tears of fond and proud, though mournful remembrance, from hearts whose yearnings are still for the noble dead.—Richmond Examiner.

Beechenbrook is, as it professes to be, a Southern Rhyme of the late war, and, of course, a tale of mingled enthusiasm and sorrow. It is full of a natural pathos which will moisten many eyes.—Salto, Gazette.

A touching poem descriptive of woman's sacrifice and suffering, and dedicated to every Southern woman who has been widowed by the war. It will be read with interest and find many sympathetic responses, especially in that section in which kindred experience has been but too frequent. It is a pleasure to refer to the handsome manner in which the book is gotten up, being entirely a Baltimore production, and reflecting the highest credit on the publishers.—Van.

KELLY & PIET, Printers and Publishers,
No. 174 Baltimore Street, Baltimore.