Snow has fallen early this year, and when Mr. Etheridge left the mines there were two and a half feet on the summit. There will be no difficulty, however, in carrying on the

Mr. McLeod Stewart lately read before the Ottawa Board of Trade a paper on "Ottawa as an Ocean Port and the emporium of the grain and coal trade of the North-west." There are two aspects, he said, in which this undertaking may be viewed; first, as a portion of the larger and more comprehensive scheme long known as the Ottawa ship canal; and, secondly, as a separate and distinct work, confined simply to an improvement of the line of navigation between Montreal and Ottawa. The speak-er's preference was with the last named idea, er's preference was with the last named idea, although it was his father, the late William Stewart, who was the first to move in favor Stewart, who was the first to move in favor of the construction of an Ottawa ship canal, while representing Bytown in the Canadian Assembly. Extracts from essays by Messrs. Keefer and Shanly were read, showing the great superiority of the Ottawa over the St. Lawrence route. The late premier, Sir John A. Macdonald, had said to the speaker, four months before he died: "If you live to be as old as I am now, you will see a double track around Lake Superior, together with a ship canal by the Ottawa, both of which will be taxed to their utmost to carry the grain and coal of the Northwest to their destination." At the conclusion of the address the Board resolved to ask the Government to look into the matter.
