BRIG-GEN. ROSS FOR VETERANS

Denounces Treatment Returned Men Received From Union Govt.

GLASS OF BEER GONE

Social Life Must Be Substituted—Favors Sunday Baseball.

TORONTO, March 18 .- Soldier and abor representatives took up the debate on the speech from the throne in the Ontario Legislature today, and from both elements came warnings of impending serious unrest if certain conditions were not met. Brig.-Gen. A. E. Ross (Kingston), said that in taking away from the soldier his social

A. E. Ross (Kingston), said that in taking away from the soldier his social glass of beer legislators had left him no other meeting place than the street corner. Mayor M. MacBride (Brantford) declared that serious unrest was being occasioned among returned soldiers and workmen by the vulgar display of wealth on city streets, and urged that public men put themselves on record against it.

Brig.-Gen. Ross was accorded generous applause from the Conservative benches when he arose to deliver his first address. While great things had been expected from the Drury Government he regretted to have to say that the menu prepared for the banquet looked no better than those of former years, and was apparently was to be served in the same old dishes in the same old way.

Grievance of Veterans.

Brig.-Gen. Ross went on to voice the grievance of returned soldiers, many of whom, he said, had come back only to find their positions filled by men younger than they and more able to have represented their country on the firing line. Some returned men, he declared, had even discovered that their war record mitigated against them in peace activities. He had several incidents to quote and ended by pointing out that before Lieut.-Col. Cooper, M.P.P., with honors and four years' service, could secure appointment in the militia there were 950 permanent officers in this country who must first be placed in positions. Of the 950 the speaker was ready to guarantee that eighty per cent of them had during the war been holding down cushy jobs in Ottawa and London.

Glass of Beer Gone.

What had come to take the place of the glass of beer, of which the soldiers had been deprived during their absence. The only place upon which they could meet now was the street corners, "where they get discontent. unrest, dissatisfaction." While he was absolutely, in accord with abolition of the bar something must be done to restore to the men something of social life.

Overseas they had been accustomed to Sunday baseball. "And who will put up the least objections," Brig.-Gen Ross declared, "to any game of baseball, cricket or anything else on a Sunday afternoon?" (Applause).

The speaker regretted the entire absence in the speech from the throne of reference to public health legislation. After declaring that he wasn't one who would speak on the subject with hushed breath, he proceeded to quote startling statistics in regard to Ontario's venereal disease.

Not for a minute did the speaker accept the premier's statement that the U. F. O, wasn't a class movement or that the present Government wasn't a class government. Referring to the absence of eight hour days formed. a class government. Referring to the absence of eight-hour day reference in the speech, he pictured the labor ship as being "souttled." He was in favor of sane patronage.

His concluding remarks were a criticism of the Drury Government for "debauching" with liquor Ontario's sister province, and a defence of the old political retries. a class government. Referring to the absence of eight-hour day reference

First Opportunity.

Labor members had their first opportunity to applaud when Mayor Mac-Labor members and their first opportunity to appliand when Mayor MacBride, Brantford, arose to address the House. In his opening remarks he paid a tribute to the memory of the late Allan Studholme, M. P. P., and his remarks concerning the pioneer Labor member were warmly applianced from Liberal and Conservative benches

If the legislative bill-of-fare did not If the legislative bill-of-fare did not contain all the planks of the Labor party's platform, Mr. MacBride reminded his Liberal and Conservative friends that there was good material evidence in that document of recognition being given Labor by the present Government.

He pointed out that Labor could take much more satisfaction from this sessional program than at those sessions when they were compelled to take what satisfaction they could out of the promise of "serious consideration" of the then government. Labor realized, he said, it couldn't get all its wants in a day.

Mothers' Pensions.

He made particular reference to the mothers' pensions legislation heralded in the speech from the throne. "I notice a couple of my friends opposite smiling," he said, "and I presume they are going to take credit for the latelamented Hearst Government for the mothers' pension bill. I want to assure you that when you see that pension bill it will be a much different bill than the one proposed by our friends on the opposite side of the House." The minimum wage board which was to be appointed, he said, would give protection particularly to young working girls and boys.

Mr. MacBride confessed to amusement every time he heard the old political parties sympathizing with the laboring men when discussing temperance legislation. "I want to say for Labor," he declared, "that Labor has made more real progress for the general development of this province and country since the curse of strong drink and the temptation connected therewith was taken away than before."

than before."

Against Patronage.

The speaker declared he would vote with both hands and for all he was worth for the abolition of the old spoils system in connection with the patronage system. Labor, he said, was behind hydro even if labor men did not agree with Sir Adam Beck in every particular.

During the five years of war, he said, 112 000 children had died from preventable causes, through undesirable conditions of living, inadequate clothing, inadequate food. "We have no right to call ourselves a Christian nation." he declared, "and we have no right to play our pomp and hypocrisy until we realize this vital fact and commence to grapple with it."

Points to Need of Buying Only Goods Made in Canada

Canadian Press Dispatch.

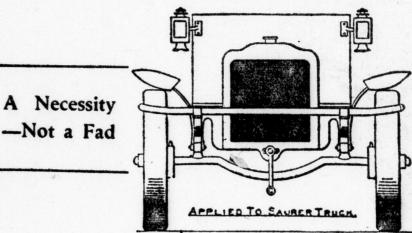

Toronto, March 2.- The Canadian Reconstruction Association has issued a long statement pointing out that, in spite of the present adverse rate of exchange, Canadian imports from the United States are still increasing, according to latest available figures, and drawing attention to the absolute necessity of Canadians purchasing Canadian-made goods in Canada, and lessening national dependence upon foreign industries.
