As the hero, William Courtneyay fills every demand. The part offers no difficulties to an actor of his calibre, and he never slights his work. A newcomer in screen acting is Lillian Greuze, who plays the heroine. She is the leading lady of the French company now in New York City, and is a decided addition to the Pathe programme. She has a very expressive face, is thoroughly schooled in her act and possesses a pleasing personality. Frank Belcher, Core Mills Adams and William Raymond have the other important roles and prove satisfactory. MRS. THROWING BASEBALLS NOT LIKE HURLING BOMBS IN TRENCHES

(Boston Herald.) Plattsburgh military training camp men are coming back to town with many stories of sport, at least a few stories of hard, grinding work. At the club recently were gathered several men who not a great while ago were star athletes in various branches of sport at several eastern universities. "For one thing," said one of the new officers, whose name would be recognized as that of a "varisty pitcher," "my experience at the camp obliterated the theory that a baseball player would be peculiarly adapted to the game of throwing hand grenades. There is nothing in that at all." "That's right," agreed several of his companions. "No, sir, it didn't help me a bit," continued the first speaker, "and I think you'll admit that I know something about throwing a baseball." "To be sure," agreed the outsider. "My Exuberant Pastime, But Not Cricket, Declares London Times Man—His Account of Match Presentation at Digby. Digby, Aug. 25.—O. S. Dunham, who for a long term of years was editor and manager of the Digby Weekly Courier, officially severed his connection with the paper and publishing firm, and met with a pleasing surprise at the hands of the directors, when H. B. Short, secretary of the company, handed by him a complete silver tea service engraved as follows: "Presented to O. S. Dunham by the Digby Printing and Publishing Company, in recognition of long and faithful service as editor and manager of the Digby Weekly Courier." Each piece bears the letter "D" engraved upon it, and will serve to remind the recipient of the goodwill existing now as heretofore with the management of the paper. Mr. Dunham replied, thanking the donors for their gift.

BASEBALL AS AN ENGLISH SPORTING WRITER SEES IT

Although the war has made the American pastime of baseball popular in England, baseball to the British sportsman still seems to be more or less "rounders." The following account of a game which appeared in the London Times is written "from the boy's" and in parenthesis this phrase is explained as "That's the boy." The coaching on part of the spectators is explained as "psychological interference." The London Times' version of baseball at Lord's is a rollicking and popular in Lord's on Saturday afternoon, and a crowd of more than 10,000 spectators, many of whom descended from the stands and sat it out on the sacred turf, thoroughly enjoyed the spirit of the occasion. It was a game of two-thirds super-rounder. Even reports of the occasion, H. R. H. Princess Louise and Mrs. Waldorf Astor, and Lord Hawke, president of the M. C. C., and ending stream of laughter and applause which is called "manning by the Britishers seen to have unloosed our temperance a hole or two since we last came over to show you how to play ball. Nobody's said 'a good game, but'—to me this afternoon!" The American and Canadian colonies in London had mobilized themselves for the occasion, and every "stunt" that came off was vociferously applauded with shouts of "Thatterboy!" (That's the boy!) while the process of endeavoring to "rattle" the pitchers and batsmen never ceased for a moment. What is more remarkable, many of the British-born spectators took an intelligent interest in the business of psychological interference, and shouted out gibes of their own invention. If baseball became an established game in this country, it might in the end evolve reports of the game as picturesque as those sometimes seen in transatlantic journals. The American fan does not care to be told that So-and-So has not a safe pair of hands. He would rather the chronicler said: "So-and-So couldn't hold the ball if it was handed to him on a plate with water-erous round it." And he likes the inaccuracy of a defeated team to be described somewhat as follows: "They'd be whipped if they were playing beanbag with a team of Colonial duffers on a waste lot back of an orphan asylum." On Saturday afternoon the American team was not as much inferior to the Canadian players as the final score (twelve to three in favor of Canada) might lead one to believe. Up to the time when each team had had three innings it seemed to be anybody's game. Then Vannals, the American pitcher, went to pieces, and the rest of the team was palpably rattled, and Canada scored
